THINGS WE CANNOT EXPLAIN

Augustine said once: "If you do not sak me what is time, I know. If you sak me, I don't know." There are many things which we are not able to put into a concise definition. What is Good? What is spirit? What is personality? What is love and witat is hats? We know all these things, and yet we cannot well define them. We attempt it at times and usually grow somewhat muddled and discouraged when we discover that the reality which we know cludes us when in what we call sclence this is seen. The things we call matter would seem at first sight to be most easily defined and yet, as we proceed, it cludes us so remarkably that we are compelled at last to admit that we cannot tell just what it is, the only thing which seems to be clear is that it is probably some kind of force. We must be content to know enany things which or who ever will live.

See the level believed that helicant in the work in the cannot tell just what it is, the only thing which seems to be clear is that it is probably some kind of force. We must be content to know enany things which we are not able to explain. And this applies to the wisset men who ever lived, or who ever will live.
