"POUR-CORNERED" TYPE The ways of modern international ducts entails the knowledge of many methods. For example. If Canada desires to trade with Germany, the "barter" or "compensation" trade, or the "Pour-cornered transaction" has to be brought into play. This method of trade, encouraged by the German government, is best explained by a concrete example given by the Can-adian Government Trade Commissioner in Germany, as follows:

TRANSACTIONS OF THE

A German import firm, for example, withing to purchase Canadian application is able to establish a connection with a manufacturer of chemicals doing regular business in Canada. With this chemical firm's agreement and cooperation, an application is filed with the German Government Super-vising Office concerned with fresh fruit and similar commodities, showing evidence of contracts for the sale of chemicals in the Canadian market and requesting authority for the purchase of stipulated quantities of Can-adian apples at specified prices. It is also desirable to indicate that the transaction will mais; the export of larger amounts of chemicals than could otherwise be arranged.

Fermission for the export deal having been obtained, the Canadian purchaser of chemicals is then advised to pay, through a bank as trustee or in some similar manner, the purchase price of the apples to the Canadian exporter of other goods and to remit the balance in excess of this amount directly to his supplier in Germany while the German apple importer, in a similar manner, makes payment to the manufacturer of chemicals. There to thus a "four-cornered" transaction involving an exchange of goods between Canada and Germany but entailing no further transfer of funds than from one Canadian and one German firm to another and the remittance from Canada to Germany of the excess value of Canadian imports over exports. Buch transaction. must be noted, says the Canadian Trade Commissioner, may be com pleted by one Canadian and one Ocrman firm, who both buy and sell from and to each other, or by one firm in one country and two in the other. but it has to date been more common for the transactions to be of the
