Farmers who live not far distant from towns, find it profitable to sell by telephone direct to their customers to these centers.

Institutions, hotels, and the better grade food stores are good customers, especially of the poultryfarmer. Selling by telephone is profitable for both parties - the farmer gets the best prices and the client obtains choice products.

Besides putting you within voice range of prospective buyers, the telephone makes it possible for others to reach you quickly. Representatives of wholesale produce houses now do most of their buying by telephone. If you have no telephone on your farm, you often miss business opportunities, And, too, your family is deprived of many enjoyable social contacts.
