The intensive domestic shopping which signalizes the initial stages of the close of another year grings into sharp relief the difference between the old and the new. In the good old times, shopping for the family in busy seasons took its physical and mental toll from the distracted housewife; nowadays, it is a pleasant adventure. The reasons are that there is now no season in foods, as a result of the art of canning, and today all the best foods are sold by grade under guaranter, as a consequence of the beneficial grading policies of the Domin-
