MORE PUBLICITY FOR LAWS

More publicity is needed for the enactment by the law makers of Canada. These include the Dominion Parliament, Provincial Legislatures and Municipal Councils, editorially comments the Vernon, B.C. News. These bodies, in their wisdom, annually enact a great deal of legislation, sufficient to tax the ability of the ablest legal minds to follow, and more than enough to totally confuse the average man. Many laws are not even heard of except in the most advanced legal circles and are not given publicity in any medium within the reach of the people.

Even the fate of proposals which the press may discuss previous to passage, are lost sight of. The average individual has all he can do in hustling a living without trying to follow the course of legislation which may be enacted one session and repealed the following one.

It may be, of course, that our legislators are not averse to the confusion which is in many minds regarding legislative proposals. The man who is taxing his powers to the utmost to wrest a living from the soil can hardly be expected to stand up and cheer because the member of his constituency or his next-door neighbor on the government payroll, gets full union wages.

But seriously, there is a dearth of knowledge on points of common law which, if made abundantly plain, would save many an unintentional infringement of the law statutes, and as a reflex result, would tend to strengthen respect for law and law-makers.

EDUCATED

The following appeared in a recent issue of Liberty magazine—the writer being anonymous—which contains a great deal of truth and common sense:

"When I see a Help Wanted Ad. in the classified columns of a newspaper which specifies that the applicant must be a 'college graduate', I wonder if this might not be better said:

"No one questions the value of education. It is a fundamental principle of a democratic form of government. But going to school or college is not necessarily the equivalent of being educated."

There are men who have never finished the sixth grade who are better educated than some college graduates. Maybe not in a few of the "polite accomplishments", but certainly in the field of specialized knowledge. It is not that you have gone to school, but how you have gone to school.

There is no secret formula possessed only by institutions of learning for cramming knowledge into the brain. Ability to think comes easily for some people. It is hard work for others. Many others who have the ability, lack the ambition. It is much easier to drift along mental byways of the pleasant sort.

The educated man does not accept all that he hears or reads. He has an inquiring mind. He questions everything regardless of source or proof. He is not carried away by novelty or plausibility. He does not let prejudice interfere with his judgment. He recognizes in education an eternal going to school.

"He doesn't have to go to college to find this out, or to do something about it."

"Thus, when I see a Help Wanted Ad. in the classified columns of my newspaper which specifies that the applicant must be a 'college graduate', I'm inclined to wonder if this might not be better said: "Educated Man!"
