ASHES and GREASE

That is how the pioneers made their soap. Nowadays science employs vastly superior ingredients and methods to produce INFINITELY BETTER SOAPS. The principle, however, is the same. "Milling" also gives finer soaps, that wear longer, and give richer lather. The NEW PALMOLIVE, for instance, is milled FOUR TIMES.

FAITH

I will not doubt, though all my ships at sea
Come drifting home with broken masts and sails;
I will believe the Hand which never fails,
From seeming evil worketh good for me,
And though I weep because those sails are tattered,
Still will I cry, while my best hopes lie shattered,
"I trust in Thee."

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return
Unanswered from the still, white realm above;
I will believe it is an all-wise love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn;
And though at times I cannot help from grieving,
Yet the pure ardor of my fixed believing
Undimmed shall burn.

I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain,
And troubles swarm like bees about a hive;
I will believe the heights for which I strive
Are only reached by anguish and by pain;
And though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses,
I yet shall see through my severest losses
The greater gain.

I will not doubt, well anchored is this faith
Like some staunch ship, my soul braves every gale;
So strong its courage that it will not quail
To breast the mighty unknown sea of death,
Oh, may I cry, though body parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt," so listening worlds may hear it,
With my last breath.

FARMER IS BIGGEST TAKER OF CHANCES

He Keeps Right on Going Regardless of Prospects, Because He Has To

There was something in the paper a few days ago about a factory laying off some of its employees, and the reason given was that business conditions in that particular line were not favorable at the moment. It was considered much safer to proceed slowly for the time being rather than to accept the chances of full-time operation.

There was a farmer who was getting some repairs made to his machinery, and he had dug up about all the cash he could command because he wanted something good in the way of seed, says the Peterborough Examiner. He expects to get on his land in a few days. He has put in nearly everything he has in sight in the way of cash so that he can go ahead with his 1938 operations. He can't hold back because he fears the season is not going to be favorable.

Wiseheads of Weather
Later on when his grain is up to a fair height and heading out there may be a summer storm of wind and rain that will send it flat. He may get good corn weather and he may not; he may get a fair crop of turnips, and it may be there will be patches where he will get none. He may get a fair cut of alfalfa the first time, and get no second crop; he may have good weather for taking in hay and again he may run into days of showers. When it comes time for the threshing his yield may be down or it may be fair enough. Right now he can't tell you. Neither can he say he is going to get a fair price for it on the market, or that he will be able to make some money by using most of the grain crop for bacon and beef cattle.

His Own Manager
In that way the farmer is the biggest chance-taker we have. He can't shut up shop because he is not certain what the year will bring forth. If he did he would go out of business. He has to go ahead just as though he were certain of a good year. Perhaps you never thought of it that way, but the farmer is in business just the same as any other individual; he is his own manager and board of directors combined; he is his own purchasing agent, and his own sales department, and he has to take a chance of making money or losing it. And yet he keeps right on going, regardless of the prospects.

A BUYING GUIDE . . .

Before you order, dinner at a restaurant you consult the bill-of-fare. Before you take a long trip by motor car you pore over road maps. Before you start out on a shopping trip you should consult the advertisements in this paper.

The advertising columns are a buying guide to you in the purchase of everything you need—including amusements! A guide that saves your time and conserves your energy; that saves useless steps and guards against false ones; that puts the s-t-r-e-t-c-h in family budgets.

The advertisements in this paper are so interesting it is difficult to see how any one could overlook them. . . fail to profit by them. Just check with yourself and be sure that you are reading the advertisements regularly—the big ones and the little ones. It is time well spent . . . always.

"The Ottawa Spotlight"

By Spectator

Canada's Foreign Policy
Ottawa, May 31st—Proceedings in the Dominion parliament during the past week have been absorbingly interesting. Overhauling everything else, has been the Prime Minister's statement on Canada's foreign policy. There was nothing of the "headline" character in the grave explanation of Canada's position in a restless world. Of her relations to the League of Nations and the British Empire. There are no commitments either in regard to this country's participation or neutrality in the event of war. The arbiters would be parliament. "Parliament will decide upon our course when and if the emergency arises. In the light of the circumstances at the time," said Mr. King. "We should endeavor to keep informed upon the situation, to keep in touch with the United Kingdom and other countries striving for peace, to carry through a reasonable and effective defence programme of our own, to support any constructive programme of conciliation and removal of economic barriers to peace."

To those who urge that Canada should take a definite stand now on the course it would pursue in case of war the Prime Minister said that "to force an issue like this upon the country would bring out deep and in some cases fundamental differences of opinion, would lead to a further strain upon the unity of a country already strained by economic depression and other consequences of the last war and its aftermath. To invite this risk on a hypothetical question would be as great a 'diservice' to Canada as the government could render." This policy he said was not completely satisfactory or completely logical. "We have worked out a satisfactory and enduring solution of the relations between the several members of the British Commonwealth in peace time; we have not yet worked out a completely logical solution of the situation in war time."

In regard to British policies in these critical years, the Prime Minister said that while there might be differences of opinion to the wisdom of these policies, "I think there can be little question of the unremitting care and anxiety which those responsible for the foreign policy of Britain have devoted to their task, or of their strenuous and determined effort to establish peace and maintain respect for solemn pledges and principles of law."

Mr. King spoke of the failure of the sanctions article of the League of Nations covenant. The government, however, was convinced of the value and necessity of the league "as an indispensable agency for organizing and strengthening the forces of good will in the world, and for effecting the essential adjustment of conflicting national interests. We must extend the field of co-operation, he said, in steadily wider fields and must seek to remove the causes of friction and fear. He was equally insistent, however, that "at the present juncture of world affairs it is not possible to maintain an international war office, military or economic." The government believed, the Prime Minister stated, "that the only feasible and constructive basis of league activity under present conditions is to develop about peace negotiations, all its possibilities of co-operation in agreed tasks, all its possibilities of shaping and focussing world opinion."

Mr. King explained the action taken by Canada in prohibiting the export of munitions to Spain. He said that in applying the Foreign Enlistment Act to the Spanish conflict. He also recounted the efforts of the signatories of the Nine Power pact, unfortunately unsuccessful, to bring about peace negotiations in the Orient between China and Japan.

Mr. Bennett, leader of the opposition, following Mr. King, speaking for himself and not for his party, which would shortly choose a new leader, agreed with the Prime Minister on some points but differed widely on others. He agreed that it would be an extraordinary situation that would drive this country into the position of having to resort to arms. "In relation to Canada's responsibilities to the League of Nations he expressed the conviction that there would have been no league if it had been thought that those responsible for its creation would not have become a continuing member of it. It was not accepted by the United States and "from that refusal consequences have flowed that are of the gravest moment to the world." The withdrawal of Germany and Japan and the virtual withdrawal of Italy has caused the league to cease to function for the purpose for which it was created. Sanctions became valueless. Great nations withdrew from the league. The virtue of sanctions was that the massed public opinion of the world would be opposed to an offender. Mr. Bennett thought that under present conditions the likelihood of Canada being involved in war through its relationship with the League of Nations was very remote.

The vital point in our foreign policy, Mr. Bennett said, was our position in the British Commonwealth. We were part of the British Empire and that relationship involved responsibilities. These responsibilities were of our own seeking. They were not imposed on us, they were settled in 1926. In the declaration of the Imperial Conference of that year the position of the members of the commonwealth was expressed as "though united by a common allegiance to the crown" and "freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations." Association did not mean separation. It meant unity of action and purpose. Quoting from a statement of the Minister of National Defence, that the British fleet was our greatest security on the Atlantic. Mr. Bennett said that in that was the application of the declaration of the declaration of 1926 "free association." He emphasized, with modern death dealing weapons, the vulnerability of Canada to attack. He was not thinking about Canada's participation in conflict. That was for parliament to decide. He was thinking of the participation of the enemy. It was not for parliament to determine whether our shores would be invaded and our

Ontario Sheep Breeders' Field Day on June 4th

Saturday, June 4th, promises to be a letter day in history of Ontario sheep breeders as John D. Patterson, Don Head Farms, near Richmond Hill, has thrown open his spacious acres for the annual Field Day of the Sheep Breeders of the province. Mr. Patterson has one of the best kept farms in Ontario stocked with Southdown sheep that have won many prizes at leading Canadian and International exhibitions. Mr. Patterson has also one of the best Aberdeen-Angus herds in Canada. Mr. Patterson is leaving no stone unturned to make the Field Day an outstanding success. In addition to providing lunch for the visitors, he is installing several baseball diamonds and horseshoe pitches. There will also be special races for the children. The Field Day will commence at 11 a.m. standard time. Don Head Farms are located about midway between Richmond Hill and Maple, two miles west of Yonge Street Highway and about 20 miles north of Toronto. Remember, every sheep breeder with his family is invited.
