THE USE OF FLOWERS

God might have bade the earth bring forth
Enough for great or small;
The oak tree and the cedar tree
Without a flower at all.
We might have had enough, enough
For every want of ours—
For luxury, medicine, and toll,
And yet have had no flowers.

Then therefore, wherefore are they made,
All dyed with rainbow light,
All fashioned with supremest grace,
Uprising day and night,
Springing in valleys green and low
And on the mountains high,
And in the silent wilderness
Where no man passes by?

Our outward life requires them not—
Then wherefore had they birth?
To minister delight to man,
To beautify the earth;
To comfort man, to whisper hope,
Whene'er his faith is dim,
For who careth for the flowers
Will care much more for Him.
—Mary Howitt.

THE STAY-AT-HOME

You followed many roads from sun to sun
And skimmed the ocean freely as a bird
To watch the way a thousand things
Were done.
To find afar the rare and final word,
I stayed at home here in the little town
Where you and I were born and raised
Together.
Envy you the flashes of renown;
I, who explore but townsmen and the weather,
Yet now that you have journeyed
back I know
That I have gained from life as much
as you,
For you have never watched a village
grow,
Nor followed lives a generation
through;
And though you may be steeped in
foreign lore,
I, who have home folks, do not ask
for more.

WILL STEAM CARS RETURN TO FAVOR?

Two Engineers Claim They Have Achieved Real Success
The steam automobile that huffed its way to popularity in the linen duster era of motoring may be due for a comeback.
In a workshop partitioned off from a public garage in Newton, Mass., three men are assembling an eight-cylinder steam engine that they predicted would bring comforts and driving ease to motorists.
The engine, its inventors hope, will develop speeds up to 75 miles an hour and run 16 miles on a gallon of furnace oil, costing only seven cents a gallon. No gear shift or transmission is required. Acceleration is governed by pressure on a pedal.

Double-Acting Engine
It was invented by Erik Delling, formerly chief engineer of the Stanley Motor Carriage Company.
"Already we have assembled one of four two-cylinder units that will comprise the double-acting engine and it has met all our expectations," Stevenson said. "We expect to have the engine completed and mounted in a conventional chassis within a month."
Stevenson planned no immediate attempt at mass production, but said he would convert any gasoline automobile into a steam car from $1,500 to $1,500.

Little Stephen

By GERTRUDE SCHALK

WNU Service.

"WOW! What's the matter with Connie?" Patty leaned against the closed door and surveyed the group of giggling girls with anxious eyes.
"She just threw me out of her room."
"Oh, what a flop!" caroled Betty, rolling her eyes.
"Some come down," added Alice, between chuckles.

SHORT SHORT STORY

"The mighty has fallen," quoth Belle, sedately, with a solemn face.
Patty spoke impatiently: "Come on girls, give me the news."
"You tell her," the girls chorused, as they pushed Belle forward. Controlling her amusement, Belle told the story of Connie Benson's peeve against Stanley Hargrave, known as the "Worm" to his classmates.
"It all started with the Worm. You know ever since he refused the last invitation to our prom, Connie has taken a decided interest in him. She thought it was because he was poor that he isolated himself from all social activities.
"The Worm seemed more approachable than ever before, so Connie really lets herself out. He reciprocates by handing her the 'story' of his life. And such a tale it is—full of sorrow and trouble and privations. And—Connie falls for it! But the best is yet to come. He dropped his notebook in his absorption, and the papers flew all over the campus; Connie helped him pick them up, and right on top there was one headed, 'Plot for One-Act Play.' Underneath were written out the very incidents that the Worm had told her. He had been stringing her all along."
The "Talesman," a small paper written and edited by the coeds, began to display a marked preference for pictures and drawings of worms. Then a series appeared dealing with the life of "Little Stephen, the Orphan Worm."
Connie brought "Little Stephen" through high school and sent him to college. Then the real fun began. Every incident she could remember that concerned Stanley was put into print. His hermit-like habits; his avoidance of all sports, and even his addiction to gray ties were mentioned.
The paper went to press Saturday and was ready for distribution Tuesday afternoon.
There, in the center of the middle page, was a drawing of Connie, gazing with hate and aversion in her eyes at "Little Stephen," who was almost submerged in a pool of tears. Copious drops were oozing from his saddened eyes. And the text—a masterpiece of sarcasm and ridicule.
"Gee, Connie, this is a knock-out!" exclaimed a crowd of boys as they gathered around the triumphant miss.
"Ho—play with fire, you know—" she sang out wisely.
Suddenly there was a disturbance at the edge of the circle. The crowd disappeared as if by magic. Facing Connie was the Worm himself. Evidently he had "turned," for, striding swiftly up to the girl, he grasped her forearm and, without a word, piloted her toward the near-by forest. Connie was speechless.
"Now, young lady, the time has come for a reckoning." A very determined young man faced a suddenly timorous girl in the leafy shadows of the trees.
"I'll admit I played a mean trick on you when you tried to be nice to me. But I didn't trust you—I thought you were merely having fun with me. You see, I was injured in the war, so that prevents me from joining in any sports. Oh, I know you didn't know."
"I didn't mind your kidding me through the medium of 'Little Stephen'; on the contrary, I enjoyed it. But I did mind the last chapter."
Connie was bewildered—what was he getting at?
"Did you really mean that you hate me as much as you looked in the picture?" It burst from him suddenly. "I couldn't stand it if you did; I know I have no right to speak to you this way, but—"
Connie stopped him with a gentle hand; her eyes were very tender.
"You mustn't speak that way; who has a better right? I have a perfect devil of a temper (for which I am grossly ashamed), and I'll admit that I felt terribly humiliated at your treatment. But I am terribly sorry I allowed my temper to carry me so far. I hope you will forgive me—and I really don't hate you."
This last was murmured softly, yet Stanley heard it. His thin face lit up amazingly, and he moved a step nearer.
"When I am through school and my health improves, do you think I might ask a certain young lady a certain question?"
The "certain young lady" glanced up shyly and put one small hand in his. Then, with a brave little smile, she spoke:
"I think that the 'certain young lady' will be very glad to answer any questions you may ask—Stanley."

FREE FROM SCIATICA FOR 35 YEARS

In Perfect Health at 73—Thanks to Kruschen

Thirty-five years ago this septuagenarian was helpless with sciatica. Then he heard of Kruschen. Since that day, he has enjoyed perfect health. Here is his remarkable story:
"Thirty-five years ago, I had a severe attack of sciatica, and could scarcely move for about six weeks. Then I started taking Kruschen—about half-a-teaspoon every morning in hot water. In a few weeks, I got rid of the awful pain in my hips. I have never had to consult a doctor since, and am still in perfect health at 73 years of age, which I can only attribute to taking Kruschen Salts every morning."—T.A.
"Most people grow old long before their time because they neglect one vital need of health—the need of internal cleanliness. Eventually, they start the healthy Kruschen habit. Then, probably for the first time in their lives, they start getting rid, every day, of all waste matter from the system. The result is renewed health and vigor. Ailments due to clogged systems vanish, youth returns, and life becomes really worth living."

Canada's Birth Rate Shows Decline

Canada's birth rate, which has been declining almost continuously during the past seventeen years, is causing considerable concern in some quarters. Foreigners continue to head the birth rate list, and at the present rate they will dominate Canada within the next few years.

In 1921, the Canadian birth rate per 1,000 population was 29.4, excluding the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, while in 1936, the last year in which twelve-month figures are available, it was 20. For the first nine months of last year the birth rate was 20.1.
W. R. Tracey, head of the bureau's vital statistics branch, and one of Canada's greatest authorities on death and birth rates, said: "The decline was a phenomenon common in the post-war years in British countries and in Western Europe. It has been one of the most prominent features of vital statistics in the last fifteen or twenty years."

Quebec had the highest birth rate from 1921 to 1936 and showed the most rapid decline from 37.6 to 24.3. New Brunswick had a birth rate of 24.2 in 1936 after declining steadily from 30.2 in 1921. However, in the first nine months of last year, New Brunswick had the highest birth rate in Canada, 24.7. Quebec took second place for the first time in seventeen years with 24.6.
British Columbia is the province with the lowest birth rate—14.1 in 1936 and 14.9 for the first nine months of last year, the rate was 17.
