The SNAPSHOT GUILD

POINT OF VIEW

MANY things go into the making of an artistic, appealing picture—and not the least important is the point of view.

In fact, the viewpoint determines the type of picture you get. Consider a picture of a person out of doors. Stand back thirty feet to take the picture, and you get a landscape view with a figure in the foreground. Stand only a few feet from the subject, and you get an informal portrait with the minimum of background. In other words, if you want to feature the person—get close to your subject. If it's the landscape you want—stand back.

Angle shots are unusual and attract attention. Shoot from an elevation, and you get a "bird's-eye" view of your subject. Shoot from below and you get a "worm's-eye" view. The resulting pictures of the same subject from the low and high viewpoints will be quite different and they will lend variety to your snapshot collection.

For example, the picture above was snapped from the beach below the diving board. If the snapshot had been perched aloft in the diving tower, with his camera pointed downward toward the pair on the springboard, his picture would have been quite different—entirely because of the difference in viewpoint.

In this picture, a K-2 filter was used on the camera lens to darken the sky and emphasize the clouds. Ordinarily, the filter would have necessitated increased exposure, but here the beach reflected so much light that 1/50 second at f.8 was correct. Had the picture been taken from a high viewpoint, with camera pointed down toward the water, no filter would have been used, because the water photographs dark without it.

Next time you're taking pictures—and today is as good a time as any—try snapping the same subject from several viewpoints, high, low, close-up, and distant. Then compare the pictures. You'll readily see how viewpoint helps you to control the arrangement of your pictures. You can simplify backgrounds, eliminate undesirable parts of a scene, make all sorts of changes—all by moving left or right, forward or backward.

This is one sure road to better pictures—study different viewpoints; choose the best one to tell your story—then shoot.

Do we want more Beer?

Last year in Georgetown there was expended in beer through our beverage rooms $20,745. This amount did NOT include that sold by the Legion nor what was purchased by Georgetown citizens in liquor stores out of town, nor, may we add, from bootleggers. The reader may make his own estimate of the total.

We are wondering, Mr. Business Man, whether YOU are not glad, (secretly perhaps) that SOME of your customers are "temperance cranks," who still refuse to deflect ANY of their patronage in the direction of the liquor vendors.

Do we need more beer? If you think we do not, be sure to sign the petition of protest against the establishing of a brewery warehouse in town.—(W.C.T.U. advt.)

John Nicollet and Party

Early Mackinac Visitors
The island of Mackinac, which figures in Indian legends and in the early French and English history of the West, was first visited by white men in 1634, when John Nicollet and a few Hurons and French voyageurs came to Green Bay to make a treaty with the Indians of that region, according to a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In 1670 the Jesuit missionary explorer, Jean Marquette, lived on that island. He remained there for most of two years, while building a chapel and dwelling on a point opposite, on the site of the present Mackinac City.

The history of the island is largely entwined with that of old Mackinac town. The village was for centuries the headquarters of the Ottawa, Ojibway and other Indian nations, and when Marquette succeeded in winning their friendship, it became the great trading post of the French Canadians. Soon a fort was constructed and the white foreigners lived there and traded in peace.

But when in 1759 Quebec fell to the English, Mackinac did also. The new masters were very unpopular with the Indians of Mackinac, who presently fell upon the English garrison and killed all its members. To retain the post, the British constructed a more substantial fort there in 1780. In 1793 it was surrendered to the United States. In the War of 1812 an English expedition surprised and captured it before its defenders were aware that war had been declared. It was returned when peace was resumed.

For many years the island was the outfitting place of John Jacob Astor's fur trade. But its history in the past century has been uneventful.

Potter's Field Traced

to a Passage in Bible
Potter's field, which means a burial ground for the poor and for strangers, was suggested by the following passage in Matthew 27:

"And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood. And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in. Wherefore that field was called, the field of blood, unto this day. Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jerome the prophet, saying, And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Israel did value; and gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me."

Just what this original potter's field was before it was converted into a cemetery for strangers is a matter of controversy, states a writer in the Indianapolis News. Some Bible commentators suggest that it may have been identified with the potter's house mentioned in Jeremiah 18:

"The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, Arise, and go down to the potter's house and there I will cause thee to hear my words. Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels. And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter; so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it."

Evidently the field purchased by the chief priests with the thirty pieces of silver for which Judas Iscariot betrayed Jesus and then cast down in the temple was either the site of a potter's workshop or the place where the potter obtained his clay.

Esquiline Hill in Rome

The Esquiline hill is the highest of the seven hills of Rome. It is between the Viminal and Caelian hills and is 246 feet in height. Under Augustus it was laid out in pleasure gardens known as the Gardens of Maecenas. Soon after it was the fashionable residential portion of the city. Virgil, Horace, Maecenas and Propertius were among its residents. The baths of Titus and Nero's golden palace were on the Esquiline and many ruins have been uncovered only to be destroyed in the erection of new buildings. The Esquiline is a portion of Rome with fine streets and buildings.

Poets' Corner Memorial

The Poets' corner in Westminster abbey became a memorial to men of letters because its first tomb was that of Chaucer. He was buried there not because he was a poet but because he was clerk of the Works at Westminster. His tomb stands beneath a stained-glass window of scenes from the "Canterbury Tales." A small Genius holds the medallion honoring the poet John Gay, and on it is the following inscription by Gay himself: "Life is a jest; and all things show it: I thought so once, but now I know it."

Fighting Crickets in China

The fighting crickets of China often have individual trainers who make them strong and pugnacious, through special diets, before their matches. An insect that wins a number of these battles-to-the-death is awarded the title of Grand Marshal, says Collier's Weekly, and his name is recorded in the historical records of the sport.
