Help For Stomach Sufferers
Testimonial: "Suffered for seven years with gnawing pain about two hours after eating. I also had a hemorrhage. I tried many remedies but got little relief until I tried Dr. McCormack's Stomachic. After taking a few bottles I was free from pain. I kept on improving, and am happy to state that I have now been well for five years, enjoying my meals without the aid of medicine."—Geo. Townsend, Gorrie, Ont.
STOMACHIC is useful in overcoming gas, bloating, sour stomach, pain after eating, and is especially helpful for night indigestion.

Bridge Club News
Monday night's meeting of the Men's Bridge Club produced the closest fit for high score of all contests to date, with only a span of 170 points between first and third. First prize was taken by the pair of Wm. King and J. P. Short. Runners-up were C. Sinclair and S. P. Chapman, with C. Benham and Jim Kennedy in third place.
McArthur-Leece
An early spring wedding was solemnized Thursday afternoon, March 16, at the home of the bride's uncle, Rev. J. A. Leece, Huttonville, of Miss Lillian Mary Leece, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Leece, King, to Mr. Vernon Earl McArthur, son of Mrs. Charles Readhead and the late Amos E. McArthur, Milton. Rev. J. A. Leece officiated against a background of ferns and Easter lilies, with Miss Marion Milroy playing the wedding music. The bride wore a gown of blue-pink sheer with white accessories and shoulder length veil, with corsage of Brian-cliff roses. Mr. King officiated. The bride wore an orchid chignon, with matching hat of violets. She wore yellow shoes. Mr. George Oulson, cousin of the groom, was best man. A reception followed. The bride's aunt, Mrs. Leece, received, wearing guardsman's blue lace over silk, with corsage of sweet peas. The groom's mother, Mrs. Readhead, assisted, wearing midnight blue chignon, with sweet peas. The happy couple left on a motor trip to Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Ottawa. On their return they will reside near Milton. The bride travelled in a smart coat and dress of old gold, with brown accessories.

Monument to Camel Driver
In the desert badlands near Quartzsite, Ariz., stands a monument of colored quartz and petrified wood inscribed to "Hi Jolly." And thereby hangs a story from a curious chapter in the history of the U. S. army. Many years ago, when the army was active in western expansion, someone was inspired to start a camel corps for patrolling the desert. Seventy-four Arabian camels and one Syrian camel driver named Hadji Ali were imported. Though the idea at first seemed sheer inspiration, it failed for several reasons, the two chief ones being that the camels developed sore feet from sharp stones in the "badlands" and that prospectors mistook the strange beasts for apparitions and continually sniped at them. Eventually the camels were released to wander in the desert. Hadji Ali, whose name became Americanized into Hi Jolly, remained in the desert with the memory of his departed camels. Thirty-three years after his death, the monument was erected by the state of Arizona.

The March meeting of the W.M.E. was held at Mrs. J. Kirkwood's home. Why Puss Is Good Jumper
We all know how well Puss jumps. She is helped in this by having countless stalked oval touch-organs on the stomach-lining that communicate with the nerve supply of the intestines and loins. These, states a writer in London Tit-Bits Magazine, are called the Pacinian bodies; and they are so small that, although there are 600 of them on the palm of the human hand, thousands of people live and die ignorant of their existence. But everybody knows how sensitive the palm of the hand is. And our pet always manages to fall on her feet, when she drops from any height. So does this deliberately, aided by her peculiar internal arrangements.

Salads for Health
By Frances Lee Barton
IT'S getting warmer. The furnace needs less oil, the stove less coal and our bodies less fuel. Eat more sparingly of heavy foods. Enjoy more liberal portions of healthful salads. This is good advice—and here's a recipe for a good one.
Hostess Salad
1 package lemon-flavored gelatin; 1 pint hot water; 1 tablespoon vinegar; ¼ teaspoon salt; dash of cayenne; 1 pimiento, cut in strips; 2 hard-cooked eggs, coarsely cut; 1 cup chopped celery; ½ cup chopped olives; 1½ teaspoons chopped chives, or 1 teaspoon scallion onion.
Dissolve gelatin in hot water. Add vinegar, ¼ teaspoon salt, and cayenne. Chill until slightly thickened. Arrange pimiento strips in individual molds. Season eggs and celery with ¼ teaspoon salt; add remaining ingredients. Fold into cup chopped celery and chill until firm. Unmold on crisp lettuce. Garnish with mayonnaise. Serves 6.

Viola Came into Use in The Fifteenth Century
Older than the violin, the viola family came into existence in the Fifteenth century. However, it passed out of general use almost 300 years later. The viola differed from the violin by having deeper ribs and a flat back, which sloped at the top. Its shoulders curved upward, thus joining the neck at a tangent, instead of at right angles. The chest of violas contained three sizes—bass (viola da gamba), tenor (viola da braccio) and the treble. To this group must be added subsidiary types—the double-bass viol, viola bastarda (baritone) and the viola d'amore.
Our modern viola developed from the viola da braccio, and, as the Italian name implies, was held by the arm. It had six strings, but in the Eighteenth century the lowest was discarded. To Gasparo Bertolotti (1540-1609) better identified with the place of his birth, da Sala, belongs the credit for perfecting our four-string viola, tuned like a violin, but a fifth lower in pitch. Our viola is a seventh larger than the violin, but earlier examples were both larger and smaller, observes an authority in the Chicago Daily News.
In the days of Bach the viola da gamba was popular. He wrote three sonatas for it, and he uses two of them in his sixth Brandenburg concerto. Of the secondary group, the viola d'amore, having sympathetic strings, has never become wholly archaic. Berlioz praised its tone quality, and Meyerbeer included it in an aria in "Les Huguenots."

A Change in Municipal Act
A change has been made in the Municipal Act regarding the appointment of a Court of Revision. In past years the court was appointed by the council and the appointees were members of the council usually the whole body. Under the new plan the council may appoint a court of revision entirely of private citizens or from the council.
