ALMOST CRIPPLED WITH RHEUMATISM

Improved Greatly When He Tried Kruschen

There has just come to our notice a case of grand relief from severe rheumatic pains. The seriousness of the man's condition and the step that led to his ultimate recovery, are described in the following letter:—
"For several years I suffered from rheumatism. I had all my teeth out, and still suffered. A year ago I lay in hospital for fourteen weeks, almost crippled. When I got home I continued to take medicine, but began to go down again. A friend of mine asked me to try Kruschen Salts, and I am very pleased to be able to say I have been on the mend ever since."
H.P.

Two of the salts in Kruschen are the most effectual solvents of uric acid known to medical science. They swiftly dull the sharp edges of the crystals—the cause of pain and stiffness and often convert them into a harmless solution, which is then expelled through the natural channels.

There are two causes, but your telegram is the principal one. And Peggy whirled out of the store, leaving the questioner more perplexed than ever.

Half an hour later, after having paced the floor of his bedroom thoughtfully, and after having written from memory the message he had sent to Emily and read it over several times the mists of puzzlement lifted and Billy suddenly appreciated Emily's interpretation.

"It'll be switched," he mumbled to himself. "I didn't mean that; but, of course, she couldn't know." Emily received with ill-concealed eagerness the letter which the postman handed her and tore it open with nervous haste as soon as he had turned from the door. Somehow, she experienced a vague feeling that this letter contained an explanation, and it did. The apology was as follows:

"Emily, dear—Your interpretation of my message was wrong. You surely must have heard that 'absence makes the heart grow fonder.' Perhaps, the second reason for your being peeved was the blonde girl (I know Ted told you). If so, it was a silly reason. I tried to tell you over the telephone that she was a professional pickpocket and was arrested by a detective shortly after leaving Boston. I'm sorry, dear, that you should have been angry for even a little while. Regretfully,—Billy."

As Emily finished reading, conflicting emotions of joy and shame took the place of doubt and anger. "Stupidity," she said to herself, and in a few minutes she was at the telephone.

"Hello, you billy goat."
"Hello, you stupid little goose."
"Don't you call on me again," teased the playful voice. "For I love you most when I see you least," it added.

It was not in concord with Emily's, but she did not say so.

"It does sound rather queer," she admitted.

Billy was on a week's business trip in New York. Teddy Gould had witnessed his departure. He had witnessed also the following incident, which he had recounted to Emily, jestingly: On the platform that ran alongside the train, Billy had encountered a beautiful blonde who dropped her purse. He had gallantly restored it to its owner and had disappeared into the train with her, both chatting pleasantly. Maybe there had been only an exchange of courtesies, but one could never tell.

A few days later Emily answered the telephone.

"Hello," said a deep, agreeable voice. It was Billy's.

Emily was dimly conscious of a slight sense of pleasure in hearing his voice again, although she feigned a tone of indifference.

"Hello, William."
"Is that you, Emily? How are you? Say, I saw the prettiest blonde girl—"

Click! Emily hung up the receiver with a bang. Things were just as she had expected. Billy had been completely captivated by the blonde girl. He certainly had a nerve to call her up and rave about the beautiful blonde. As for Billy, he was dumfounded at Emily's treatment of him.

That afternoon while Peggy was making a purchase in the general store, Billy wandered in, looking rather depressed.

Interpretations

"I DON'T care a whit what you think, Peggy. The sentiment expressed in his telegram was a direct insult. Perhaps the pretty blonde he met was too charming to be resisted." Emily's tone bore deep traces of hurt in spite of her brave attempt at self-control.

"Billy has always been so utterly devoted to you, dearie, that I can't believe—"

"Just read that and you will have to believe." Emily suddenly interrupted, jerking from her pocket a telegram and thrusting it into Peggy's hand. "Very likely it was meant for a friendly little message, but evidently Billy's feelings overcame him and he wrote just now he felt about it."

The message read thus:
"Dear Emily—Very busy. Love you most when I see you least.—Billy"

Peggy's eyes held a glint of a smile as she handed back the troublesome telegram. Her thoughts
