In the Spotlight

at Ottawa

By Spectator
Ottawa, January 30.—There were plenty of prophecies who were quite sure that by May or June at the very latest a general election would be called, but no one outside the immediate cabinet had any idea that the announcement would be made so soon and that parliament would be immediately dissolved. It all came about with startling suddenness. At three o'clock on Thursday the 25th, in accordance with custom, Lord Tweedsmuir read the speech from the Throne in the Senate Chamber. The speech from the Throne as a rule gives a pretty comprehensive survey of important legislation to be introduced during the session, but the speech of last Thursday dealt gravely and solemnly with the war, ending with the announcement of an election. Then when the members of the House of Commons who had listened to the speech from the bar of the Senate, had returned to their own chamber there was quite a sharp exchange of glances, the floor of the House calling an immediate election. The announcement of the election had obviously come as a complete surprise. Then when the House rose at six o'clock expecting to re-assemble at eight, another bombshell was to come. The cabinet met in the East Block of the parliament buildings, drafted a dissolution order and got the Governor-General to sign it. This was at 7.07 o'clock just four hours after the session convened. So bewildered parliamentarians some of whom had arrived in the morning expecting to stay for three or four months, were packing their bags at night to return to their homes.

The speech from the Throne said Canada's industrial, financial and other resources were being steadily mobilized and all war activities coordinated. The Canadian people were shown their determination "to share with Britain and France to the utmost of their strength in the defence of freedom." For the effective prosecution of the war, it was imperative the speech said, that those charged with the grave responsibility of carrying on the government of Canada should be fortified "by a direct and unquestioned mandate from the people." The speech from the Throne is of course the voice of the government. Later in the Commons in the face of bitter opposition to the decision of an immediate election, the Prime Minister said the political campaign was already begun. The resolution passed by the Ontario legislature criticizing the government's war measures and averring that the government had made little effort to prosecute the war, had purported to be made "in the name of the people of Canada" the Prime Minister said. This was one of the reasons given for the decision to make an immediate appeal to the people for a mandate. "I do not think it advisable," said Mr. King, "that we should wait until June for a general election. One important thing is what may happen on the Western front in the early spring. If we can have an election before the heavy fighting takes place, then in the public interest that should be done." Crave declared it would be taken when fighting opens in the spring, and the government should have a clear mandate. "Since parliament decided that Canada should participate in the war, myself and my colleagues and myself have given every ounce of our strength and every hour of our time in the most devoted manner possible seeking to further the interests of the nation. He believed, he said, that the country approved of the manner in which the government had undertaken and discharged its duties: Dr. Manion, Conservative Leader, said the government's action was unprecedented and was an effort to obtain a "snap decision" from the people. He criticized the government for its lack of preparedness, and for the ineffectiveness of its war effort. Only at the eleventh hour, he said, had the government remedied the situation in relation to allowances to certain classes of dependents of enlisted men. Mr. Woodsword, C.P.R. spokesman, protested against the calling of an election before the government had given an account of its stewardship to parliament. In any event, for good or ill, the die has been cast. Those who believe there should either have been a coalition government or that there should be no election in wartime have been silenced. A wartime election is to be held. Under the War Measures Act, Canadian soldiers of the First Division in England will be given the right to vote over seas. Votes will likely be cast before the division reaches the front in France. Soldiers here, will of course also have the right to cast their ballots.

Life's Tragedies
My nose is red, my hair a mess,
I'm wearing last year's hat,
I haven't got a griddle on,
And look extremely fat.
So naturally I meet a gent
Whom I once, at one time,
When I'm dressed up like Astor's horse
I never meet a soul, of course.

HEATING HINTS

by James Street
IN A recent letter a reader asks: "What is the most important thing to look for when the furnace has a good fire in it but the rooms are not warm enough? There is one "thing" that will always account for such a condition, but there are at least thirty "things" that may be wrong in a case like this. Some of these things may be quickly and easily remedied by a man who is handy around the house; others require more specialized skill. Some of the faults may be easily located, while others may pass unnoticed unless the man seeking them is familiar with heating systems. Sometimes the Check Damper is in the wrong place; or the Turn Damper handle may have slipped, giving a false position of the damper; or the regulator may be improperly adjusted; or there may be an excessive amount of fly ash in the smoke-pipe or on the boiler surfaces; or the radiators may be improperly pitched; or the draft may be impeded. Perhaps a loose bolt, or rusty joint may be the cause of wasted heat. All of these things can be quickly adjusted by a competent service man. (18)

Parliament Dissolved

fort which has been referred to in the speech from the throne, as well as by the Prime Minister in his remarks on the floor of the house this afternoon. In view of the fact that long before the war this government was nicknamed the "do-nothing government," the people of Canada should not have expected that this government would be able to handle the war effort at all well. The people have not been disappointed in that. Not only was this government not prepared for war, but in my mind they have handled the war effort in a most disgraceful manner. After more than a year's warning we have called up one division to go overseas. There were not enough clothes for these men; there were not enough boots, not enough blankets and not enough machine-guns. Canadian men went overseas un-equipped to a large extent. What equipment they had was obtained by gathering in what clothes and equipment could be found scattered here, there and everywhere throughout all sections of Canada. I know of one battalion from British Columbia which was dressed in cotton underwear and cotton clothing. These men crossed this north country in the middle of December and continued across the north Atlantic in the same kind of weather. I say, again without fear of competition—this information comes to me from doctors in charge of these militia regiments—that many of these men are sick and large numbers have been sent to the hospital because of lack of preparation and because of lack of vision on the part of this government. If it were true that no one had foreseen the danger of war then perhaps I could not criticize. But I find that the Prime Minister, in his remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the throne during last session—I refer particularly to pages 28, 30, 31 and 32 of Hansard—said repeatedly that for as long as five years he had thought of nothing except the necessity of preparing for war. Yet no preparation of any kind was made. If it were not for the fact that this is a tragedy, some of the stories which we hear about the lack of preparation would be quite funny. For example when the war began a general wrote me—I wonder if I can remember the phrase he used?—stating that the anti-aircraft units had no anti-aircraft guns, and that the searchlight units had no searchlights. That is what has happened all across this country. There has been a complete lack of preparation, and as a result the war effort so far is deplorable. I am not objecting particularly to a general election. I am objecting to the manner in which it is being called. I am objecting to the House of Commons being called together and then laughed at by the Prime Minister and—if you like—by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), in the face of all their talk across this country of the supremacy of this parliament. They are laughing at the House of Commons and at the supremacy of the parliament. They tell parliament in session that they are going to pass under the War Measures Act regulations for the overseas soldier's vote. What sense of fairness can we expect in a government which has done what it has done today with regard to this overseas vote? However, I wish to close. I merely wanted to point out a few of the things which came into my head when the Prime Minister was speaking. All of them are mentioned in the speech from the throne. I say that the Prime Minister, in refusing the British the opportunity to train their pilots here, did what was unfair to the people of Canada. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I absolutely deny that there was any refusal to train pilots here. My hon. friend by endless repetition of a statement of that kind, cannot give it any veracity. Mr. MANTON: Well, I can give it veracity by the hon. gentleman's own words, and before this election is over I will quote them over and over again. His words distinctly state that these proposals came from the British informally. He said that they came here; these were not requests, they were "proposals" of some such word as that, which anyway meant that; that they had carried on informal conversations with this government in Canada; and he said that he refused on the ground of constitutional practice. I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the house. I repeat what I said at the beginning, that this is a most unfair procedure, unfair not only to the parliament of Canada, but to the people of Canada, and I suggest to the Prime Minister that even now—he has not definitely said that he is going to dissolve the house tonight—but I take it, that he is. Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think after my hon. friend's speech it would be advisable to.
