Mickey Rooney, who has played everything from Shakespeare down to slap-stick comedy since he was knee-high to a turtle, finally got an assignment that worried him. He had to SING in "Babes in Arms," which comes to the Gregory Theatre, Georgetown, on Saturday, Feb. 10th.
Mickey plays the piano and dances like a streak, but he has never sung a note on the screen, and he was scared to death of the outcome.
Rooney also does a duet number with Judy Garland, "Good Morning," and impersonates Eddie Leonard singing "Ida." In addition he adds his voice to two spectacular numbers, "Babes in Arms" and "God's Country."
Rooney enacts scenes in "Babes in Arms" that closely parallel his own life.

Memories That Linger On . . .

are those that are carefully written into a perpetuating medium . . . It is the desire of everyone that their name live forever, but time dims thoughts that once were so vivid. Only when a memorial that will stand the ravages of the ages has been erected can this fond hope of one be realized.

A memorial executed in imported Scotch granite stands as a symbol of this integrity and dignity of the name it immortalizes!
