New Motor Road In Canadian Rockies

The development of Canada as a confederation has been associated from the very first with the penetration of mountain barriers. When the final spike was driven on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway the ends of the Dominion were linked together in fact as well as in symbol. The completion of the Canadian Northern Railway to Vancouver, and of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to Prince Rupert, were additional chains in an iron tie of which Canadian enterprise and engineering may well be proud.

More recently, with the progress of invention, has come the automobile highway, penetrating the Rocky Mountains at various points, particularly into the hearts of national parks, as at Banff, Jasper, Waterton Lakes, Kootenay and Yoho. Gradually, broad and safe highways have been bringing the charm of these mountain areas within the reach of every motorist. But until this time, Banff, oldest of the national parks, and Jasper, largest of the national parks, although adjoining each other, have been separated by a sea of mountains impenetrable except by saddle-train and pack-train.

Each park has long been developing its own highways, but it was not until recent years that a plan to connect the two systems by an automobile road—not across the Rockies but along the Rockies—looked definite form. Construction of the Interpark highway began in 1931, and the official opening is scheduled for Dominion Day, July 1st, 1940.

The Town of Banff, headquarters of the national park of the same name, located some 85 miles west of Calgary, Alberta, with which it is connected by a good all-weather road, may be regarded as the starting point of the Banff-Waterton Highway. The road leaves Banff at an altitude of approximately 4,540 feet and makes a gentle ascent up the beautiful Bow Valley toward Lake Louise. Points of scenic splendour and inviting sidetrips pass with almost every mile. Johnston Canyon, with its waterfall, is a short distance to the right of the highway, four miles further on the junction with the Banff-Windermere Highway leading down through Kootenay National Park to Kingsgate and the United Lake Louise Station 37 miles from Banff, with the world-famous Lake Louise a mile high mirroring the ice-colours of Victoria Glacier about three miles distant on the left. Thus far the road has followed what will become part of the Trans-Canada Highway to Vancouver. A short distance before reaching Lake Louise Station begins the Banff-Jasper Highway proper, and continues the ascent of the Bow Valley almost due north, with Waputik Range and Hector Lake on the west and Mountain Hector to the east.

From Bow Lake the road climbs through a broad alpine meadow to the summit of Bow Pass (6,878 feet), from which point it descends into the Mistaya River Valley by easy grades, piercing magnificent stands of original timber. It continues down the Mistaya River Valley past Mistaya and Waterton Lakes, which glisten like blue jewels in the emerald setting of surrounding forests. As it skirts Waterton Lakes the road passes within view of Mount Chephren (10,715 feet), a great pyramid of rock, before cutting along the base of Mount Murchison (10,436 feet) to the valley of the North Saskatchewan River, which is bridged just below its junction with the Mistaya. Here the confluence of the three main sources of the North Saskatchewan. Most important of these is the north fork, coming in from the north; next, and almost as large, is the Howse River, which comes in from the west and southwest, and the low level of the Middle Fork. The Mistaya, formerly known as the South Fork or Bear Creek, joins the others from the south, after passing through a remarkable canyon which is accessible by trail from the highway.

Proceeding northward, the motorist will drive along the flat below the mighty wall of Mount Wilson (10,931 feet). From certain points one may count as many as twelve waterfalls on this mountain. The Alexandra River, which comes in at right angles from the west, opens a wide valley to disclose at its headwaters the impressive peaks of the Great Divide. Mount Saskatchewan (10,964 feet) completely fills the space to the west, and Mount Coleman and Cirrus constitute the eastern wall of the valley. Waterfalls, fed by lakes and glaciers, cascade for hundreds of feet down the precipitous mountain sides.

Ascending from the North Saskatchewan Valley is a climb which has been known for many years as the "Big Hill," representing an abrupt rise of over 1,000 feet. The motorist now finds himself in a veritable sea of great mountains of the Rockies. To the right rises Nigel Peak (10,535 feet); to the left Mount Athabaska, (11,462 feet) westward from Mount Athabaska. Snow Dome, in the great Columbia Ice field, (11,340 feet) and beyond this towers Mount Columbia, (12,294 feet); and Mount King Edward, (11,400 feet). Another ice-capped peak, Mount Kitchener, (11,500 feet) rears its white crown forward and to the left. Snow Dome is literally the roof of the North American continent, for here meet the watersheds of the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Arctic.

The highway approaches to within a few hundred feet of Athabaska Glacier in between Snow Dome and Mount Athabaska, this river of ice flows out of the Columbia Ice-field on the skyline for a distance of about four miles to its tongue, where it melts to become the source of the Sunwapta River. From the point where it leaves the ice-field to the tongue the glacier drops about 3,000 feet. Estimated to be anything from 2,000 feet thick, this great ice-cap extends over an area of approximately 150 square miles. Of the 21 highest peaks in the Canadian Rockies, 11 are in the immediate vicinity of this ice field. Ascent of several of these can be made on skis even in midsummer.
