For the Love of Pete

By LEROY W. GORE (McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

THE slim, blonde girl stood in front of Frederickson's market writing diligently on a pad of paper...

Papa Lippincott, waddling down the street from the corner cafe where Mr. Daniels of the Marmouth Retailers' Alliance had indulged in his mid-afternoon cup of coffee...

Young Pete Lippincott started up the ladder in front of the store. Very neat marksmanship, young man, the dapper Mr. Daniels approved. "What are you building here?"

The pillar of canned corn beside the entrance was already 10 feet high. "We have a canned goods special each Saturday, sir," Pete explained. "I've borrowed this pillar from one of the city stores. It attracts a lot of attention."

Across the street Paula Frederickson was pulling apart the two halves of a potato, rejoined nearly with a match. One of the halves was written "Meet me at the Inn tonight seven o'clock."

But Papa Lippincott was happy enough as he filed his signature to a check for $5.00 and handed it to Mr. Daniels. The check paid for fifty shares of stock in the Marmouth Retailers' Alliance and, according to the contract which Mr. Daniels had just handed him, entitled Papa to an additional ten per cent discount on all goods purchased from said firm.

"Let old man Frederickson snop around after my prices now," Papa Lippincott snarled. "Mr. Daniels consulted his wrist watch. "It must be on my way. I'm due in Chicago tomorrow morning."

In the meantime Paula Frederickson had halved a potato from the Frederickson stock, and written her reply to Pete's message: "I'll be there, sweetheart." Across the street Pete had clamped a heavy basket to the ladder, and was transferring cans to the top of the pillar. It was Paula's intention to hurl the potato into the basket, but her aim was woefully amiss. The potato struck Pete squarely between the shoulders. He jumped, uttered a cry of pained surprise, and the ladder scraped dangerously along the wall toward the carefully constructed pillar.

Mr. Daniels, choosing this unfortunate moment to make his exit, was buried beneath an avalanche of tin cans. When they removed him he was considerably bruised and quite, quite unconscious.

"I ain't blaming you for throwing that potato," Papa Frederickson was telling Paula next evening. "I wouldn't blame you if you threw a brick at Lippincott's dumb-headed boy, but why did you do it?"

Paula sighed wearily. "Just a silly notion. What were the damages to Mr. Daniels?"

"Three busted ribs and a fractured leg. He won't be out of the hospital for quite a spell."

Paula wondered what damages Mr. Daniels would claim.

But the most crushing blow of all was the way Pete had run out on her. She'd seen him hurry down the street even before the crowd gathered. Likely he was still in hiding, fearful that Paula might confess she hadn't thrown the potato at him maliciously, as everyone supposed. He needn't be afraid she would drag him into the case. She wasn't anxious to confess her love for a sneaking coward. But Paula couldn't swallow the lump in her throat.

And suddenly Pete was in the library. Pete! hatless, his hair mussed, but grinning widely. "Papa was on his feet, angry. "See here, young man. Ain't you Lippincott's caused us enough trouble?" But Pete's eyes were on Paula. "Darling!" he cried. "You're a heroine!"

Paula stared at him, completely bewildered. A flood of words tumbled from Pete. "I got suspicious of this man Daniels the minute I heard he'd nicked dad for five thousand. I hopped a plane to Chicago and talked to the president of the Marmouth Retailers' Alliance. Daniels is wanted by the police in dozens of places. He collected a half million this week with his stock-selling racket. And the reward for his capture is $5,000. Oh, Paula, if you hadn't thrown that potato—" "Tell me, Paula," Papa interrupted. "Why did you throw that potato?"

Paula was giggling hysterically. "For the love of Pete!"

The SNAPSHOT GUILD USING THE SMALL CAMERA

The organ-grinder's monkey—snapped on the street with a miniature camera. Carry a small camera in your pocket—you'll reap a reward in interesting pictures.

To get the most fun and benefit from photography, you should have a camera that you can keep with you at all times. Such a camera will enable you to seize upon a picture chance wherever you observe one—and, at the same time, having the camera handy will keep you alert, so that you actually observe more snapshot opportunities.

Up until a few years ago, most cameras were relatively bulky; but that is not the case today. Modern folding cameras, even those of rather large-sized pictures, are relatively compact; and many miniature cameras are so small and neatly built that they can be carried in a pocket or woman's purse without the least inconvenience.

The miniature camera is an ideal choice for "everyday" use. It need not be an expensive model—in fact, it may be that a very inexpensive one will cover your needs. The chief advantage of the medium-priced and finer deluxe cameras in this class is that they have fast lenses and fast shutters, so that pictures can be taken under adverse light conditions. Many of the better models can also be used for picture-taking in full color—an extremely valuable feature.
