A MOTHER'S HYMN OF PRAISE

Oh God be praised for romping boys,
Who plague me every day,
Who bring the wrinkles to my face
And turn my hair to grey;
Because for every silvered lock
My heart has softer grown,
And 'midst the furrows on my brow,
Are seeds of patience sown.

Oh, God be praised for muddy boots
That tramp the hall and stair,
For mouths to feed, for pants to patch,
For every trivial care;
Because, in all my daily task
I see so plain and clear
The need God has, through them, for me,
And why he placed me here.

But, most of all I praise my God
For rosy lips to kiss,
For loving arms that round me cling,
And fill my soul with bliss;
Because, though in a lowly way,
I feel I'm living through
Those same sweet years of motherhood
That gentle Mary knew.
—Eva C. Barrett, in "Onward."
