LITTLE THINGS

One morning I awakened, resolved
throughout the day
To make the most of little things I found along the way.
I never thought the sun so bright and
wonderful before,
Or knew folk were so interesting who brought me to the door.
I revelled in their sundry wares and
found it fine indeed,
To help, though in a humble way, the ones who seemed in need,
At sundown I had come to know the value of a smile,
And that it is the little things which really are worthwhile.

An Airman to His Mother

In addition to ... London Times recently carried a letter that may well become a classic.

Among the personal descriptions of young R.A.F. pilots in a ... appeal for ... who was fatally injured flying, he believed killed? was a letter to his mother—to be sent to her if he were killed.

This letter was perhaps the most amazing one I have ever read: simple and direct in its wording, but splendid and uplifting in its outlook," says the young officer's Station Commander. "It was inevitable that I should read it—in fact he must have intended this, for it was left open in order that I might be certain that no prohibited information was disclosed.

"I sent the letter to the bereaved mother, and asked her whether I might publish it anonymously, as I feel its contents may bring comfort to other mothers, and that every one in our country may feel proud to read of the sentiments which support an average airman in the execution of his present arduous duties. I have received the mother's permission, and I hope this letter may be read by the greatest possible number of our countrymen at home and abroad."

Text of the Letter

Dearest Mother: Though I feel no premonition at all, events are moving rapidly, and I have instructed that this letter be forwarded to you should I fail to return from one of the raids which we shall shortly be called upon to undertake. You must hope on for a month, but at the end of that time you must accept the fact that I have handed my task over to the extremely capable hands of my comrades of the Royal Air Force, as so many splendid fellows have already done.

First, it will comfort you to know that my role in this war has been of the greatest importance. Our patrols ... out over the North Sea have helped to keep the trade routes clear for our convoys and supply ships, and on one occasion our information was instrumental in saving the lives of the men in a crippled lighthouse relief ship. Though it will be difficult for you, you will disappoint me if you do not at least try to accept the facts dispassionately, for I shall have done my duty to the utmost of my ability. No man can do more, and no one calling himself a man could do less.

I have always admired your amazing courage in the face of continual setbacks; in the way you have given me as good an education and background as any one in the country; and always kept up appearances without ever losing faith in the future. My death would not mean that your struggle has been in vain. Far from it. It means that your sacrifice is as great as mine. Those who serve England must expect nothing from her; we debase ourselves if we regard our country as merely a place in which to eat and sleep.

History resounds with illustrious names who have given all, yet their sacrifice has resulted in the British Empire, where there is a measure of peace, justice, and freedom for all, and where a higher standard of civilisation has evolved and is still evolving, than anywhere else. But, this is not only concerning our own land. To-day we are faced with the greatest organised challenge to Christianity and civilisation that the world has ever seen, and I count myself lucky and honoured to be the right age and fully trained to throw my full weight into the scale. For this I have to thank you. Yet there is more work for you to do. The home front will still have to stay united for years after the war is won. For all that can be said against it, I still maintain that this war is a very good thing; every individual is having the chance to give and dare all for his principle like the martyrs of old. However long the time may be, one thing can never be altered—I shall have lived and died an Englishman. Nothing else matters one jot, nor can anything ever change it.

You must not grieve for me, for if you really believe in religion and all that it entails that would be hypocrisy. I have no fear of death; only a queer elation . . . I would have it no other way. The universe is so vast and so ageless that the life of one man can only be justified by the measure of his sacrifice. We are sent to this world to acquire a personality and a character to take with us that can never be taken from us. Those who just eat and sleep, prosper and procreate, are no better than animals if all their lives they are ... people.

I firmly and absolutely believe that evil things are sent into the world to ... deliberately by our Creator to test our manhood, for ... He knows what is ... the only way we have been ... for moral principles.

I count myself fortunate to have ...

... Atkinson, Jr., ... who ... Ont., ... marksmanship ... cured the highest grand aggregate over ... days' competition and became individual champion of Canada in the small bore rifle class.

You can smoke and drink moderately, but if bad habits get you down, you are finished as a marksman," Mr. Atkinson believes. "It takes a steady hand and good eyes blended with constant practice," he said. "One of the big factors is the gun the marksman uses. If he knows it and how it will react when fired he has gone a long way."

Atkinson knows his gun is good because he made it himself. The .22 rifle weighs 14 pounds, more than four pounds heavier than a standard .303 army rifle.

"The weight is what counts when the gun has to be held steady," he said. "A lighter rifle will waver while a heavy gun remains on the target. I made the barrel of my gun from a heavy, old muzzle-loader, which I rebored. I used to be a woodworker, so it wasn't much trouble for me to fashion the stock. I also went to work and made this tube sight which I pre-

DO YOU THINK IT WOULD WORK?

Here is the latest chain letter:—"This chain was started in Reno in the hope of bringing happiness to tired business men. Unlike most chains, this one does not cost money. Simply send a copy of this letter to six male friends, then bundle up your wife and send her to the fellow whose name heads the list. When your name works to the top you will receive in return 16,176 gorgeous girls. Have faith — do not break the chain. One man broke the chain and got his wife back."
