Mrs. Patterson, wife of Rev. Patterson (former pastor of Norval Presbyterian Church) visited many of her friends here last Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 8th. Mrs. Patterson is having a short stay with her sister in Toronto. Highway No. 7 is receiving improvement where it is badly needed. The very dangerous curve at the foot of the West Branch hill is being built up and broadened out at the outer edge of the bend. It is hoped that during the winter months this added construction will facilitate turning the sharp curve and that motorists will feel and be safer.

NEWS PARADE

AUTUMN

I want to come to autumn with silver in my hair and look at me and stare; I'd like to reach October free from blemish or from taint, As splendid as a maple tree which artists love to paint. I'd like to come to Autumn with my life work fully done And look a little like a tree that's gleaming in the sun; I'd like to think that I at last could come through care and tears And be as fair to look upon as every elm appears. But when I reach October full contented I shall be If those with whom I've walked through life shall still have faith in me; If I have made my life a thing which others can admire.

FIREMEN GIVEN CALL

The firemen were called to a fire at the home of Andrew Dewhurst on Guelph St., Friday evening. The fire was confined to the stovepipes and was extinguished before the firemen could hook on to the water hydrant.

NAME NEW DESTROYER

The following item is taken from the Quinte Sun, of Trenton, and will be read with interest. Two of the fifty destroyers obtained by Great Britain from the United States of America have been renamed H.M.S. Georgetown and H.M.S. Brighton, in recognition of important communities in both the British Empire and the United States. Surely this calls for a duel by the Georgetown Herald and the Brighton Ensign!

DEDICATED TO THOSE SERVING

The following is commonly known as the "Ely Letter," and prose poem written in 1917 by Mr. Henry Ely, who thought that it would be a fitting Christmas greeting for sending to the American soldiers in France. It is such a fine composition and embodies the sentiments held in the homeland regarding those serving in His Majesty's forces, both from the homeland and from the Dominion. THE ELVES ARE BUSY PAINTING THE LEAVES

The Autumn season is again with us - the month of October. Thanksgiving time. Halloween and pumpkins. The time when the jolly Elves are credited with painting the leaves in their most beautiful hues. Yes, folks, it's Autumn, one of the levellest seasons of the year. There are many places nearby where the colors of the leaves may be enjoyed. Take for instance, the road north of here to Erin, which we travelled last Sunday. The valley from the Brabant Hill was just a mass of the gorgeous living purple and green and gold. But we think the Credit Falls and Caledon district is noted for its gaily-colored appearance at this season. At any rate it is hard to beat. Take a trip to the country and enjoy the leaves. The weather has been permissive on the week ends, and we hope it will continue for the holiday which is at hand. The Autumn grandeur is nature's final show before the winter sets in.

CIVIL GUARD TRAIN FOR IRLAND

On Sunday, Oct. 27th, the local company of Halton County Civil Guard, together with the other units will parade at Milton. In the meantime the Guards are busily training at the Town Hall every Tuesday and Friday evenings. The turnout is very encouraging to the officers, and there are others who would like to associate themselves with this organization, they will be welcomed. Lectures are also included in the training, on first aid, signalling and map-reading. On Tuesday evening Captain Williams took full charge of the unit in the absence of Lt. Col. Ballantine. The first instruction in semaphore signalling was given by one of the members, Lieut. R. F. Barber was present to offer constructive criticism, and his suggestions were welcomed by the officers and men.

MEMBER OF NORVAL CLUB HAS CURIOSITY RIFLE

The registration of rifles and shotguns being carried out in Canada has brought to light many ancient and unusual firearms in the possession of citizens of this country. A number of muzzle-loaders relics were included in the 400-odd guns registered at Hanover, as well as an old army rifle stamped with a crown and the name "Enfield." Amongst the unusual guns was a French "cane gun" registered by Braxton as an ordinary malacca cane. It fires a nine-millimetre bullet powered by mercuric fulminate. The curiosity is owned by Dr. C. Stephenson, a member of the Norval Rifle Club.

DAD O'DELL'S DREAM

As Railway Agent he died and went to where all sinful men are sent. He saw Old Nick in brimstone dim. Just at some distance, beckoning him To come at once and join the host And get his infernal road to him. "Come quick," the demon said, "and suffer The fate that falls to every duffer That falls the proper way to take Before the people hold his wake. Now, sir, your name and occupation. Also your creed and earthly station; We want to know who's here admitted And see for sure if he is fitted."

"In express and freight, throughout the year, I gave good service and many records clear. In train orders also day and night Good service has been my delight. To you Old Nick, so great in size, I don't wish to apologize. But still I'd have you know the truth That ever since my days of youth For forty years I did not shirk In doing any station work. I answered questions by the score, And was made the brunt of many a bore. Who often asked - if a train left at ten What time tomorrow it leaves again. "I answered cross-eyed men and women With tongues as sour as persimmon. I stood the eternal flow of gab, I did not shoot or swear or stab, Till 'death' at last, on gloomy pinion Transported me to your dominion. Now here I am a poor weak ghost Ready to fry or stew or roast. Deal with me when and how you will, I've got my patience with me still."

Then out spoke Nick as he dropped a tear. "Old man, you've got no business here. If you for forty years endured Such torture, you must be insured To hardships such as we don't know - You'd have a picnic down below, If you could cork so long and well With patience, you're not fit for hell; Such virtue would my kingdom warp, Go forth and get a golden harp."

THIRTY YEARS OR SO AGO

England was showing a keen interest in a mythical invasion of the tight little island. There hadn't been a continental war of importance for 40 years, yet the shadow of Pan-Germanism had already begun to arise. The setting-up of public feeling and uneasiness, which had been brewing for years because of the Germans' construction of a huge navy and their aggressiveness for empire hinged on a play, "An Englishman's Home," written and staged in 1909 by Lt. Col. Guy de Maurier, a son of the author of "Tribby." A tremendous hit from the start, it soon was being presented by several road companies and provoked columns of discussion in all the leading newspapers. The scene of the play is in the house of a middle-class Englishman, whose way of life is suddenly broken up by German troops, who had taken advantage of a protracted fog and a labour strike that paralyzed telegraphic service in Great Britain to invade the land. They made a surprise landing on the coast and pushed inland before anyone was aware of it. The householder shoots one of the invaders and is immediately taken out and executed. Here, by the first writing, the play ended, but as a sop to sentiment a scene was added in which a motley crew of volunteers capture the invaders. The furor was immediate because of the question that the play raised. Fuel was added to the fire by the recalling of the elaborate statement by Prime Minister Balfour five years before - that the landing of 10,000 or more troops in England by Germany would be impossible. Lord Roberts took a different position. He held that Germany had transports available to carry 200,000 men and supplies to the shores of England. He pointed out that their was a sort of "fifth column" at that day, namely, there were in the United Kingdom a number of Germans, many of them trained soldiers. He demanded conscription. As a result of the agitation that the play provoked a large expansion was granted to the navy and enlistment in the army was greatly increased. Strange to say, "An Englishman's Home" was also produced in Berlin, where it was hissed off the stage in great disorder because it portrayed a band of volunteers succeeding in defeating trained German soldiers. The toothpick is not in favor with the etiquette experts; but dentists say it is a very good thing to use. However, only people of courage now use toothpicks. "How many film stars can you mention who have never been divorced." "Well, there's Donald Duck."
