STORE VEGETABLES ON FLOOR OF SAND

Heavy Metal or Stone Containers Help Keep Roots Fresh, States George Rush, Ontario Vegetable Specialist.

Vegetables for winter use are best stored on a sand floor at a temperature about three degrees above freezing, advises George Rush, Vegetable specialist of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

However, this is difficult where furnaces are used as the temperature is much higher and the air dry. If a portion of the basement could be shut off, roots could then be kept in good condition.

Heavy metal or stone containers are excellent for keeping roots fresh, states Rush, and these containers have given excellent results where used.

Roots may be placed in a heap in the garden and covered with two inches of earth. They may be kept this way until the temperature reaches 20 degrees of frost before being removed to the cellar for winter use.

Mr. Rush says the home garden should be cleaned up immediately and all rubbish and diseased plants destroyed by burning, as only fire really destroys these diseases. Digging refuse in will bring trouble next season as disease will carry over in the soil, he warns.

ACTON RESIDENT BURIED HERE

A service was held at the residence on Thursday, and the funeral party travelled by motor to Georgetown, where interment was made in Greenwood Cemetery.

Special services marked the 96th Anniversary of Knox Presbyterian church on Oct. 28th. Rev. John Riddell, B.A., of Milton, spoke at the morning service, and Rev. A. N. Miller, B.D., of Brampton, was in the pulpit for the evening worship.

Blinded by glaring headlights, 70-year old George H. Ridley, of Acton, had a narrow escape recently when his car hit a telephone pole and turned over in the ditch a mile west of Rockwood. Minor damages were caused to the auto, but Mr. Ridley was uninjured.

Seventy five fourth year students of Guelph's O.A.C. made an educational tour of J. B. Watkins poultry farm near Acton. Mr. Watkins has a fine flock of Barred and White Rocks. — Acton Free Press.

ANGLICAN SHORAL FESTIVAL AT OAKVILLE

Last Friday evening, Anglican choirs from the Halton Deanery gathered at St. Jude's Church, Oakville, for a choral festival. This was in connection with the 100th anniversary celebration of the founding of St. Jude's. Nineteen members of St. George's Choir, including choir master W. F. Bradley, made the Oakville trip, and although it was a rainy, foggy night, a good attendance was reported.

Mr. Fletcher, musical director of the Oakville church, was at the organ for the service, which included anthems and hymns, and an inspiring address by Canon Samuel, of Hamilton. An interesting feature was an anthem "Brightly Gleams Our Banner," which was sung by the combined choirs, numbering over 125 voices.

A social hour was held afterwards, when the ladies of the Oakville church served coffee to the visiting choirs.
