SARDINE FOR SALE
In China the merchant opens the sardine can and sells them one at a time, since many folk cannot buy a whole can. After the sardines are all sold the enterprising salesman sells by so much a spoonful the olive oil and the tomato sauce in which the fish were packed. This goes to those who cannot afford to buy a whole sardine. The Chinese pour the sauce over their bowls of rice for flavoring, thus securing some variation from the ordinary taste.
