Cycling in the National Parks
Seeing Canada's National Parks on a wheel rather than behind a wheel is becoming increasingly popular now-a-days. Gas and rubber restrictions are gradually compelling motorists to put away their cars for the duration of the war, or at least to cut down radically on the distance they travel for pleasure. The result is an army of cyclists on the roads, and this army is likely to grow still larger as motoring difficulties increase.

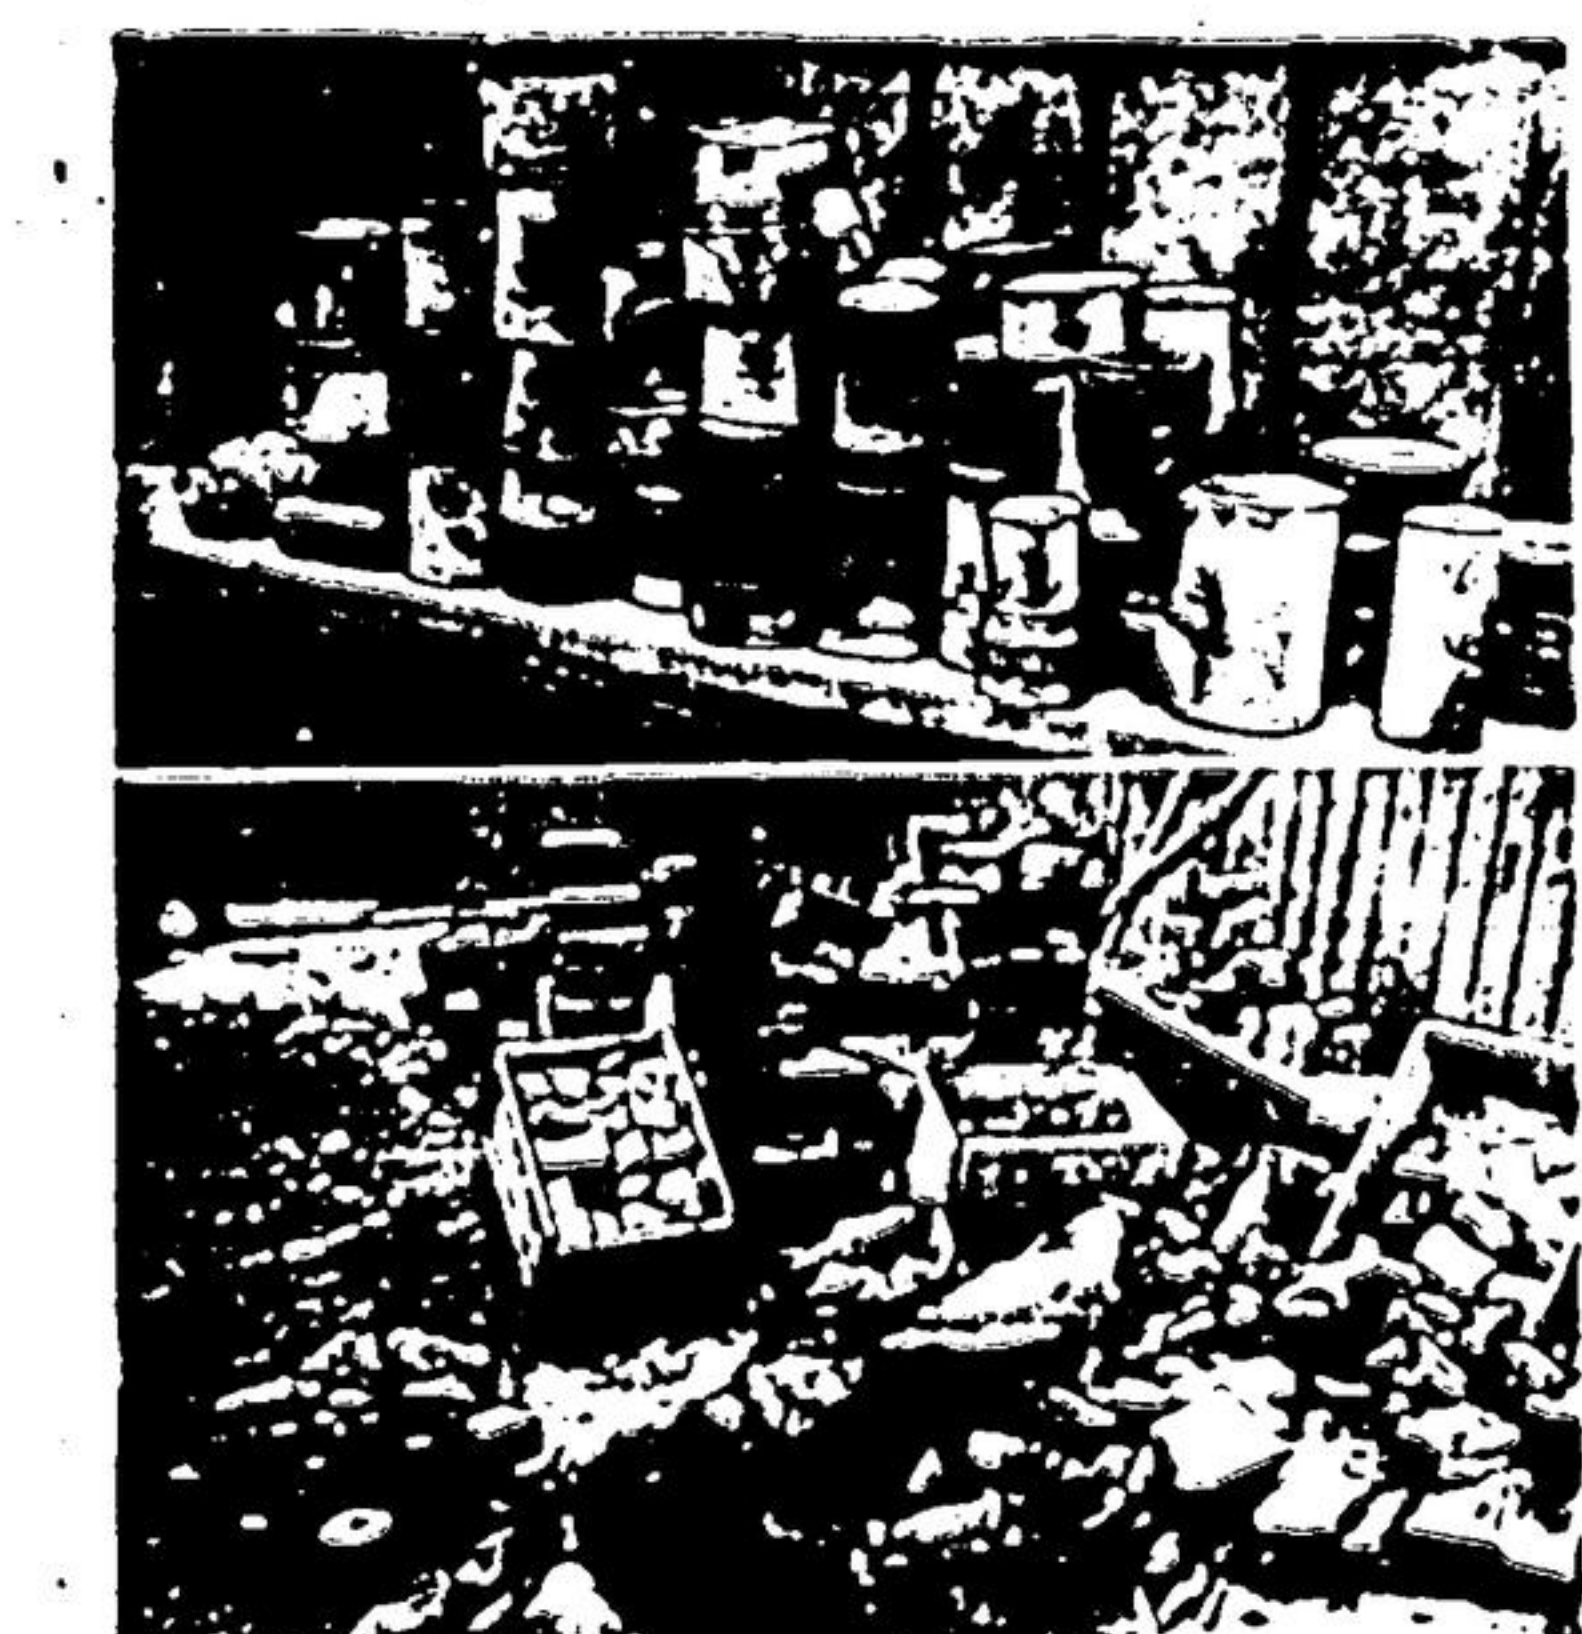

In the national parks cyclists may be seen gaily pedalling along the highways, enjoying the scenery and the flower-scented atmosphere as they never could have done from the interior of a closed car. They see and hear and feel the country, and are on intimate terms with nature. They have time for a careful survey of the scenes around each bend in the road, at the crest of each hill, and down in the quiet flower-bedecked valleys.

From their bicycles they hear the songs of the birds, the rustling of wild animals in the undergrowth, and the tinkling sound of small streams almost hidden in the forest. They have a cheery greeting for everyone they meet on the highway; they imitate the call of the moose or the cry of the loon in the marshy edges of a lake, and they whistle the notes of many of the song birds merrily singing from near by trees. Frequently they are able to glimpse and perhaps photograph of wild life which will remain a treasured memory of their visit to the national parks.

These cyclists may be tired and hungry at the end of the day, but it will be a tiredness devoid of nervous tension. Undoubtedly cyclists will feel fatigued if they try to cover too great a distance in a day, but it will be a physical rather than a mental fatigue. Usually, after the kind of sleep which comes in the parks, they are just as fresh and keen as ever.

Autumn is perhaps the best time of the year for cycling in the national parks. Motor traffic on the park highways has by now diminished considerably. The days, though are beginning to shorten, are bright and crisp; fish are biting well and bird life seems more abundant than ever. Big game come down to the road side and are a common sight along the park highways. Camera hunters reap a rich harvest of special trophies for the mapshot album. The woods are a riot of colour, orange, gold, green, crimson, and many other widely variegated combinations which nature blends into a harmonious pattern for its own special fall showing.

Truly a cycling tour of the national parks at this time of the year is a never-to-be-forgotten experience.

Cartons in including matches, lighter fluid and other inflammable materials, robbed Canadian soldiers, over-see of the gifts shown in the picture above. Major General J. P. McKenzie, Quartermaster General of the Canadian Army, has requested that no inflammable materials be included in parcels or letters sent out to soldiers. The picture shows contents of 39 bags of mail.
