

"As We See It"

By J. A. Burns

We don't hear so much about a second front since the Derby held. Any one that remembers those awful casualty lists of our Canadian boys during the first Great War and those show length lists after the Derby held would hesitate to demand a second front. We would think the casualty lists of Canadians is plenty long enough these days without another. Imagine such as a second front would mean. Among the lists of killed and missing we noticed some that we know, others we knew their parents and as in the last war it always seemed that it was the pick of the country that was bated in those early lists. The boys didn't get the same training during the last war. We send a group of young men that were to Battalion at that time and instead of enlisting out there as they should have done they paid their way to Canada in order to enlist there and as they thought to get overseas sooner because to say many of that bunch never came back. Canadians at that time had very little idea of what war was like. Today's generation has a much better idea of its horrors.

Remembering the lads that gave their lives during the first great war we seem to associate those words of Lawrence Binyon's in "For the Fallen": "They shall not grow old, as we that are left grow old; they shall not weary them, nor the years condemn." The going down of the sun and in the morning.

We will remember them. Another question that seems to come to mind with the same association is those words that Kipling wrote especially for the War Memorial that was erected at Baile St. Marie, Ont., for the fallen of that city and district.

From little towns in a far land we

To save our honour and a world at peace, My little town in a far land we sleep, And trust the things we won, to you, to keep.

One can scarcely mention Baile St. Marie without thinking of Jim Curran, the Editor of the Daily Paper, The Baile Star. You often notice mention of him and how he always championed everything in Algoma, but especially the Algoma wolves. If we are not mistaken Jim Curran was one of three brothers and their home Orillia. One and of course coming from Orillia they would play Lacrosse. Funny how that word Lacrosse sticks isn't it? We know Jack Curran better than we did Jim Curran Brothers were in the paving business and some years ago when living in Northern Ontario Curran Bros had the paving contract in the town that we were living in at that time. Autos had not made an appearance at that time and we did our traveling by train. There was a circus down the line at a larger town and naturally we along with quite a number went down to the circus. Coming home that night on the late train we took us off to eat side and in a very confidential manner whispering to our ear, he wanted to know if we had any particular home with us. Well but those Curran brothers got a big kick out of life. An officer at the Baile is different to that of any other (ex) newspaper editor that we ever run in and that's one of a small town newspaper editor. By that we mean that it seems a little more human like. The city of Baile St. Marie seems to be away off the beaten path. Going through to the west by train one main line goes away to the north of the Baile. On the other hand, if one travels to the head of the lake by boat, they pass through the Baile and its famous canal locks. The Baile is located in the mining and lumbering districts and it has quite a large pulp mill. We wouldn't know the date of the founding of the town of Georgetown but we imagine that it would be about one hundred years ago and many towns of the surrounding country would be founded along about the same time. It is difficult therefore to understand just why Baile St. Marie would be founded over three hundred years ago. At that time for trading and the main business in many parts of Canada and the location of the Baile meant that it was quite an important supply place for fur traders travelling by water and of course at that time water travel was the only way.

The Munro-Burnham Combines were good enough to take the first name of the Man of Iron, Renfrew Lacrosse, at the Major Leaf Gardens last Wednesday night. Judging by the game that night the Combines should take the series and it may be over before these lines appear in print. The game was not up to standard for senior Lacrosse both teams apparently playing a cautious game in an endeavour to find out what the other team could do. On the other hand it was a very clean game and Buckie MacDonald, the Referee, who in his way is a very clean player himself, kept the game well under control. Buckie's mate was Bill Wallace of Kit-
