As this is the time of year when kittens are given away to all and sundry a word of warning might be in keeping. The laws of this land do not permit animals to be abused. The cat comes under all the laws pertaining to domestic animals. If the persons in charge of small children have not time to see that the kittens in their possession are not subject to torture, then it is much better not to have a kitten. Cruelty in these cases is quite unnecessary. One may often see in this town happy little children and happy little kittens frolicking together.
It is simply a matter of the guardian's attitude. In view of the cases concerning kittens that have been brought to my notice recently a word to the careless might be in order.

playing games. A buffet luncheon was served at the conclusion of the evening.

The Laine Scots W. A. met at the home of Mrs. Robert Laine last Thursday evening to hold a social evening dition to ladies from Georgetown, re-

The group travelled to Ouelph on the the depot by the camp lorry. After being graciously received at the school, they were introduced to Mrs. Parlow from Edmonton, who took the ladies on a tour of inspection. They saw the girls' living quarters, cooking class-was No. 1 Test Kitchen where recipes

She carried a bouquet of dark red clash with the enemy, and we reprint the entire article concerning one of our home town boys.

P-O "Bar" E. Hall, of St. James, Man., and Sgt. "Law" M. Clark, of Georgetown, Ont., were in the crew of an African-bound Beaufort which had a ten-minute battle with three Junkers last Tuesday night, and though badly damaged managed to return to its base in Britain.

How uneven were the odds in the fight is told by comparing the armament of the planes. The Beaufort had two Browning guns in the Bristol turbine (the turret was wrecked during the battle) two Vickers guns in the nose and two .50's. Each Junker had four cannon, and four machine guns against six lighter British guns.

The Beaufort was out of the clouds for the first time since leaving England when the Junkers spotted it. When it returned with hydraulics and turret wrecked and its flaps shot off it was definitely in category "D".

Came Right For Them
"Law" back in the turret saw two of the Junkers come out of the clouds just as the Beaufort emerged. The two came right for them but the British pilot turned to meet the attack. As he did so they saw the third Junker come up from underneath.

The Beaufort's hydraulics were shot off. Then the turret was put out of action. A cannon shell came through and exploded in the plane. Another shell came through the turret only two inches from Clark's head leaving a six-inch shell in the perfor. One cannon shell went through the starboard gas tank but didn't explode.
Forty gallons of gas were lost before the tank sealed.

One bullet hit the Beaufort's transmitter, affecting the frequency modulation, and Hall had trouble in getting through an identity signal strong enough. They never had a chance to use their front guns. Their flaps were shot away, but they managed to get the hydraulics down with the emergency gear.

Hall and Clark were crossed together in Air Transportation Command last October. Since then they have been to Cairo, North Africa, West Africa, Belgian Congo and other places.

"But we had never seen an enemy plane before," they said. "These Junkers were painted whitish grey and adorned with black crosses."

Another brother, William (Bill) Clark, exhibited in the RCAF a month ago, and is now stationed at Edmonton, Alberta.
