IN MEMORIAM
WHEELER—In loving memory of our dear mother, Emma Jane Wheeler, who passed away October 3rd, 1940. Dear mother, you are not forgotten. Though on earth you are no more; Still in memory you are with us As you always were before.

Gun Shy
 By CLYDE B. HOUGH
 McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

WHEN Hyder fumbled his rifle and dropped it, that first morning at drill, most of us recruits and some of the older heads snickered. "Silence in the ranks," thundered Sergeant Kane.
 Hyder made no move to recover his rifle—just stood staring down at it in a trance-like horror. "Don't be afraid of it, guy," Kane said. "It won't bite anybody but them Axis bums."
 But Hyder was afraid of a gun; all guns, as we learned later. His hands would tremble every time he touched one. So, naturally, he drew a low rating in rank-and-file judgment. His only champion was Barry, another rookie. "I know the g-y. You fellows don't," Barry told us in the squad room.
 "We know he's afraid of guns. He must be yellow," came the answer. "You're wrong, all of you," Barry argued. "Hyder and I were raised in the same town, on the same block. He's no coward—just gun shy. Born that way, same as some people are born with blue eyes, others brown."
 Someone said, "Bah, he's . . ."
 and cut the speech short. Another glanced toward the door but immediately looked away.
 Hyder seemed rooted on the threshold, towhead thrust forward, eyes squinting, his squatty body taut, hard.
 For a moment, he held his belligerent pose and then, eyes straight ahead, he walked slowly and deliberately down the aisle between the two rows of cots. He stopped before his friend. "Thanks, Barry," he said, and turned and left the room.
 "Well, guts or no guts," said Sergeant Kane, "no gun-shy son will ever be any good in this man's army."

 "Hyder could be," Barry contended. "He was a hotel cook before the draft got him. A good one, too, and he likes the work."
 "A cook, huh?" Kane mused. "That's a way for me to get him off my hands. Think I'll see the mess sergeant about it."
 That was back in barracks. Now this was Barabon and the jungle and the Naps. We ate our oatmeal duty, Barry and Hyder with us. Sergeant Kane was in charge. Part of the men had to be up tents while the rest were out from foxholes and tents. Part of the tents, in a clearing where we would be camped at night, and the back bush. The boys were lying out on cots.
 Barry had been right. The towhead was bobbing and weaving. I saw a towhead bobbing and weaving.
 "I moved fast, Barry and Sergeant Kane running beside me. We hit that circle and speared us a Nip apiece. Hyder was still swinging. We got through to him and the yellow boys scattered. Barry and Kane carried him to a tent and I looked at the red-smeared weapon lying on the ground. There were eighteen dead Japs sprawled one upon another—every head busted by Hyder's favorite instrument.
 In the tent Sergeant Kane was swabbing a wound in Hyder's thigh. A bayonet thrust had got him. His shirt was off and there was a long slash across his ribs.
 I said, "You did wrong, buddy. According to rules, you should have ducked those Nips and joined the rest of us, back to back. How come they were after our chow?"
 He protested. "They hooked that pot of stew and tried to run with it. How could I let them get away with it?"

- IN BELGIUM, a family has one shirt—eight of them share it.
- IN POLAND, a little girl boasts about her dress, but it has been patched in 50 places.
- IN HOLLAND, children forage for food in garbage pails and sleep in cellars.
- IN JUGOSLAVIA, one out of every six people has tuberculosis.
- IN JUGOSLAVIA, half a million children wander the streets wrapped in newspapers; 4 families are living in one small cold room. At night, they all huddle beneath a single blanket for warmth. To these people, the loss of a tattered dress or a worn shoe is a major catastrophe.
