THIS AND THAT IN SPORT

By G. "Mac" McGilvray

Our sports note last week drew a little attention, and the following letter received speaks for itself. We are pleased that the gentlemen mentioned have found a summer diversion, as the sudden drop in hockey stocks, might have a bad effect from the standpoint of too much sleep and less to "beef" about.

THE SPORTING EDITOR,
The Georgetown Herald
Georgetown Ontario.

Dear "Mac":

No further need for worry of a summer diversion for Jack Armstrong, Bob Lane and Ern Thompson.

At 12:01 a.m. April 18th I disposed of 49 and nine tenths per cent interest in seven horses to the above mentioned. Just as soon as we iron out a few difficulties such as what is which, and which end is who, we will consult you, advertising department re a perpetual ad.

In the meantime on a temporary arrangement it will be known as — ARMSTRONG, LANE, THOMPSON & McMILLAN
"Hockey and Horses"

Your truly,
Ken McMillan

The trout season opened last week end, but as yet we have heard of no outstanding catches. The weather has been too cool for much fishing. Here's a rather interesting poem from the "Penn. Angler":

PRE-SEASON THOUGHTS

The snow now is melting, and rain-drops are peltting.
Spring is at last drawing near,
Warm winds now come winging, with them green leaves bringing
And the very best time of year.

I no longer gripe, but relax with my pipe,
And dream of the days which are nigh
When I'll leave for the stream, no longer a dream,
And tempt Mr. Trout with a fly.

The birds will be singing, the air will be ringing
With spring sounds so vibrant and shrill,
I'll get out my tackle, my rod and my hackle,
And proceed to the stream for a thrill.

Once I get there, I'll abandon all care
And fan my wee fly in the breeze,
Then I'll cast with some grace, to a well chosen place,
Near the bows of the overhanging trees.

Curiosity Shop

Curiosity, so they say, was responsible for the unhappy ending of the cat. Perhaps a too inquisitive attitude did kill kitty but, for ordinary human beings, it is most worthwhile to go through life with a tongue—providing we can mark time long enough to give our attention to the answers.

For those who are charged with the responsibility of directing the efforts of others it is just as important to be interested as to be interesting. Of course, like any other force, curiosity can wreck as well as build; it must be used with discretion.

Spend a little time with a three-year-old boy and you'll learn the true art of self-education, the principle of finding out what you don't know. If we could retain the curious attitude we had as children we'd be better-than average in anything we chose to tackle. Unfortunately, as we grow older the question marks disappear; we hesitate to display our ignorance of seemingly simple matters. It is a fundamental of sound leadership to regain the inquisitive attitude of childhood. This is the state of mind in which one cannot be content with the "know how" without learning the "know why". Further, when faced with a particular problem one can forget self and consider the question objectively from all angles. Routine duties prove interesting when carried out with the idea in mind of analysing the why and wherefore, for after all, experience is valuable only in so far as it enables us to do a better job the next time.

Curiosity, a carefully directed interest in the work and its place in the overall picture, should be encouraged in those who look upon us as a leader. We are not, for example, tightening screws, we are making electrical appliances for use in homes. Satisfying this curiosity, once developed, will not only help to make a better employee of the mediocre one, but we'll find our stock soaring in the eyes of those

Mr. Trout may be sure that my fly is a lure. And restrain from the impulse to strike. Or again he may feel in the mood for a meal. And give me a whale of a fight. Either way I'm content, for the time is well spent. There will be other days I can spare. When perhaps I can creed with my rod and my reel.
