As Others See Us

IT'S THIS WAY—

Writing in the Rochester Times, Howard C. Hosmer has an interesting column concerning the elimination of the 10% premium which American money enjoyed in Canada during the war. The clipping was sent to a local man by a relative in the States, and he thought it would be of interest to our readers.

"Neighbor—For the sake of the good neighbor policy, we hope that nobody will consider Canada's recent change in monetary arrangements a personal insult.

Too much depends on Canadian-American relationships to get sore about Canada's placing her dollar on a par with the good old American skin.

For instance, if everybody got mad at Canada, where would everybody go to fish? It's pretty obvious that New York State's lakes and streams have lost their lure for a good portion of the fishing public. The bass bite better above the border.

If the customs people closed the border in a fit of pettishness, where would people go to buy woollen socks?

These are pertinent questions, and here are pertinent facts, gleaned from long experience as a neighbor of Canada and practically no knowledge whatever about the country.

Canadian baseball teams have long been noted for their unwillingness to let the Rochester Red Wings win more than a token number of games from them.

Hamilton, Ont., is the home of several people who think the Rochester Ad Club is the greatest organization of its kind on the continent.

Canadian ale is no better than American ale. It just costs more.

Ninety-nine per cent of the wartime rumors about Canada's having plenty of everything to eat, drink, and wear were probably false. Canada simply had better control of its price control and rationing program than we did.

More Canadians — There is no known record of an American's having bested a Canadian in a business deal. Canadians are nice people and excellent hosts. It is not true that they all run tourist homes and excursion boats.

Canadian politicians say such awful things about each other in the newspapers that half the editions have to be printed on asbestos. The first time an American politico popped off in such language about a foe, he'd wind up on the business end of a whacking libel suit.

Canadians are no better off right now on clothing than we are, no matter what you hear. They have a lot of rough woollen stuff like shirts and socks in their stores right now but no more cotton goods, probably not half as much.

Not everybody is going to lose by Canada's new money deal. A Rochester athlete who plays with Hamilton, Ont., in the Pony baseball league sent his check home to his wife to cash the other day. He had forgotten to endorse it so she sent it back. By the time he had returned it to Rochester, it was worth $50 more than it had been originally.

Canadians still love American cigarettes. The only difference between their gaspers and ours is that the American cigarette makers use tobacco.

Americans who think Canadians make better shoes than we do have been known to wear a pair of old shoes across the border, buy Canadian boots, throw their old shoes away and drive back wearing new ones.

During the war, Canada watched America so closely that whenever the OPA clamped controls on an American commodity, Canadian residents all but stampeded their own stores for supplies of the same thing.

Canada's price and supply control program differed from ours. Canada never told its people when it was going to ration something, thereby giving them a chance to stock up. They simply woke up in the morning and found that the commodity was rationed.

The best appraisal of Americans was written by a Canadian, the late Stephen Leacock, who accomplished the virtually impossible by being both a mathematician and a humorist.

Something to remember: Canadians are exactly like Americans except that they are born farther north.
