Desolate Saltee Islands

To Become Pleasure Site

The Saltee islands, off the southeast coast of Eire, have been sold by the Irish land commission, with the announcement that they will be made into a pleasure resort after the war—a sort of British Monte Carlo. The islands, two in number, are less than five miles off Kilmore Quay.

The largest of the islands, South Saltee, is about a mile long and half as wide, says the National Geographic society. It was farmed for many years but, because the island afforded no amusement, farm laborers refused to remain there. Deserted, the islands soon were overrun by rats and rabbits, and a variety of birds, nested in their rocky cliffs. They are on one of the great bird migration routes. Thirty-seven species of birds have been recorded there. Thirty breed there. Rabbit trappers occasionally visited the islands.

Girt with rocks and reefs, the islands rise in steep cliffs. The North Saltee's highest point is 114 feet above the sea; South Saltee's, 166 feet. Until marked by lighthouse and lightship the islands accounted for many shipwrecks. In the spring the Saltees are blue with fields of wild hyacinth. The white flowers of the bladder campion are much in evidence later, and sea pinks color the southern shores. The island's climate is moderate, summer and winter.

Vegetable Minerals

Are Lost in Kitchen

Minerals of vegetables are lost in two ways—through discarding certain parts of the vegetable in its preparation and through the cooking process. The green portions of the vegetables we sometimes discard are rich in calcium and iron; also some minerals are lost if the vegetable is peeled and still greater losses occur if it is peeled and cut into small pieces before cooking.

In cooking, losses occur through chemical changes or else nutrients are dissolved in the cooking liquid. Calcium, phosphorus and iron are not destroyed in the cooking process, but are dissolved out of the vegetables into the cooking water.

The smart vegetable cook will use these mineral-rich cooking waters in soups, gravies and dressings—thereby avoiding their waste and giving her family the benefit of all the vegetable minerals. Or better yet, she will form the habit of cooking vegetables in the minimum amount of water, and there will be little excess cooking water remaining when the vegetable is done.

Cleveland's Second Term

Grover Cleveland's second term (1893-97) proved a series of stormy events which brought constant disapproval on his head. Through sheer force of will he managed to have the Sherman Silver act repealed in a special session of congress. In 1894 he ordered federal troops to Chicago to clear up the Pullman strike. In an effort to reduce the tariff he revised tariff regulations but senate alterations so changed the bill that he refused to sign it and it became effective without his signature. His next move was to withdraw Harrison's Hawaiian treaty from the senate in an unsuccessful attempt to restore Hawaii's former government. However, his most startling act and one which caused international political circles to tremble was his famous December, 1895, message to congress in which he stated that Great Britain threatened infringement of the Monroe Doctrine in her boundary dispute between British Guiana and Venezuela and warned that the United States would go to war to protect the doctrine.

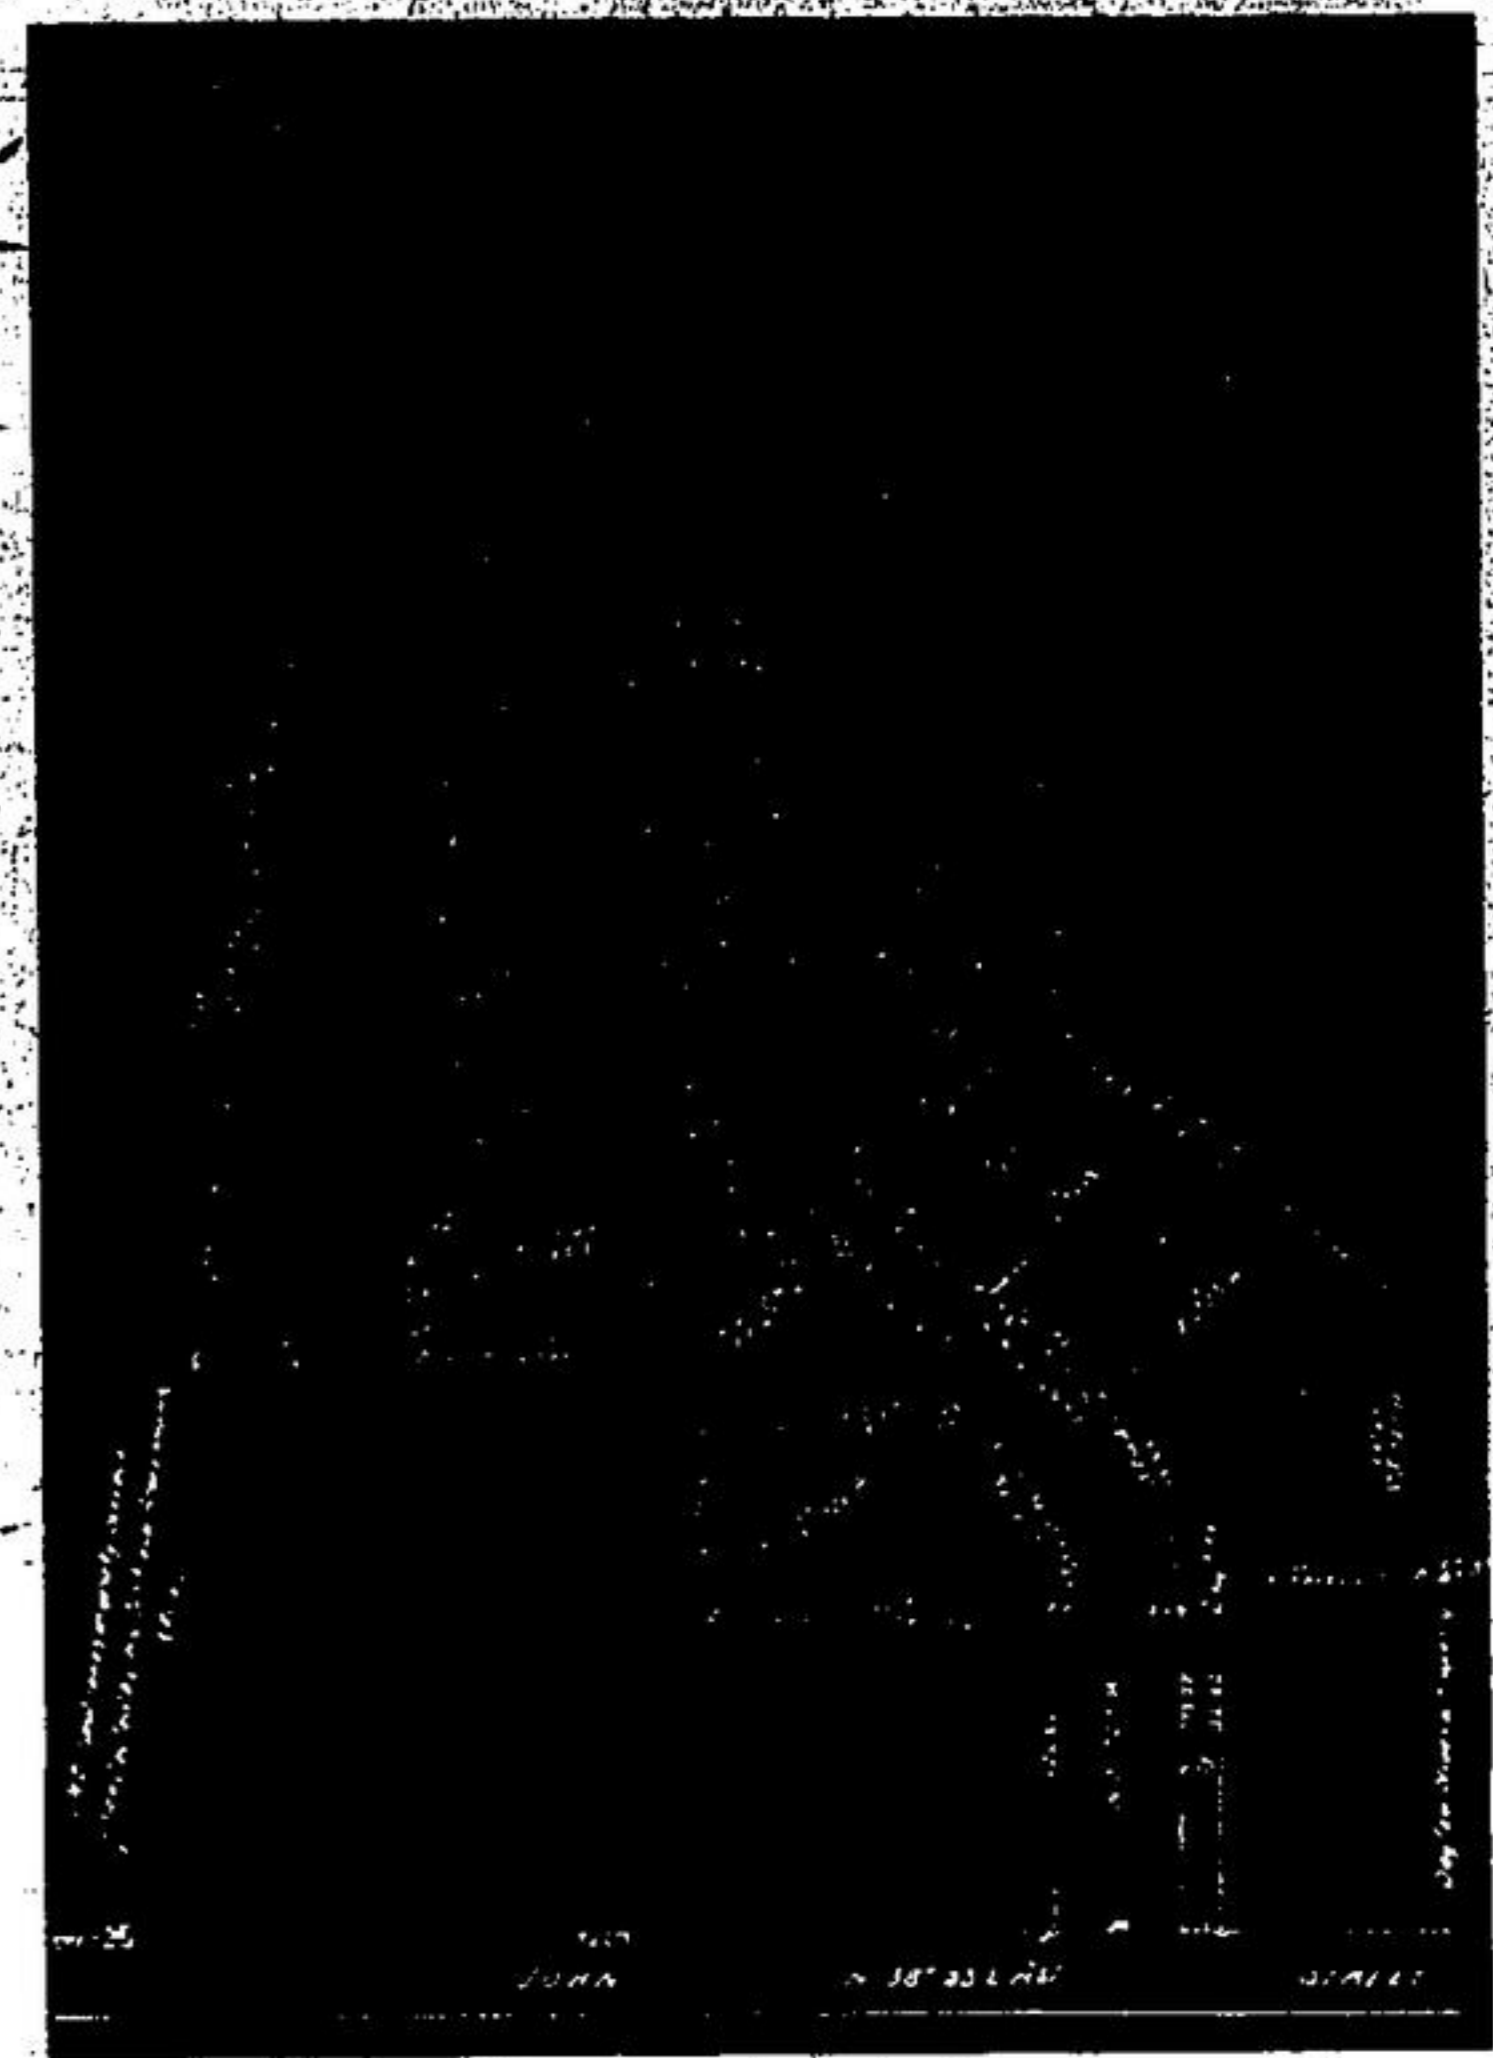

Rug Care

To refresh linoleums and waxed floors, remove old wax with a solvent such as turpentine or warm soapy water. Allow to dry and then apply a thin coat of paste wax. Wait for 30 minutes, then polish thoroughly. A coat of wax may be applied to painted floors to protect the finish and make them last longer. The best of care should be given hard-to-replace rugs. To make them look like new, vacuum or dust to remove all dirt and grit. Then give the rug a good shampoo, using a heavy soap lather. Rinse well and dry thoroughly. After the rug is dry, brush the nap with a stiff brush. For furniture that begins to look gray and dull at this time of year, a cleaner of warm water, linseed oil, and turpentine will make it look like new. Allow to dry and then remove with a clean soft cloth. It works wonders on varnished wood work too.

Home Canning

An extensive preserving study has been carried on over a period of months to determine the best proportions of sugar and corn syrup to use in home canning. The study indicates that, with the addition of corn syrup to sugar, home-canned fruit will score high in texture, flavor, color and general appearance. Some of the fruits tested were sour cherries, peaches, apples, plums, blackberries and pears. The work began when a staff of home economists and a food chemist began to pack jars of fruits in specially arranged home kitchens in Westfield, N. J., using various proportions of sugar and sugar and corn syrup.
