

IN MEMORIAM.
ANDERSON — In loving memory of our dear daughter-in-law Betty who passed away August 4, 1946. One year has passed but still we miss her. Never shall her memory fade. Loving thoughts will always linger. Found the grave where she is laid. Ever remembered by mother and father-in-law and brother-in-law.
ANDERSON — In loving memory of Elizabeth (Betty) Anderson who passed away August 4th, 1946. Remembrance is a golden chain. Death tries to break, but all in vain; To have, to love, and then to part, In the greatest sorrow of one's heart. The years may wipe out many things. But this they wipe out never — The memory of those happy days. When we were all together.
 Always remembered by Bob and Audrey Anderson.

SHORT STORY

Young Blade
 By GLORIA FERSCHT

DANNY HALE, his teeth still chattering from the wet chill of the night, twisted his head on the soft warm pillow in an effort to speak. "Mom, I'm sorry, honest I am. I couldn't help it."
 The tall blonde boy pulled the warm covers more closely around him. Two dimples, which he had not outgrown during his 15 years, were even now visible in his cheeks among several scratches and a deep gash slightly below his right eye.

It was not unusual for Danny to wander off by himself, especially when he was angry or disturbed. He often spent the entire day swimming or boating in the lake, but he was never gone overnight. At one hour past midnight, Mr. Hale and a small searching party had found Danny lying on the beach, cold and wet.
 Dr. Scott spoke softly to Danny as he applied an anesthetic to the boy's bruised face. "Are you warm, Danny?"
 There was a curt reply. "Sure."
 The experienced country doctor could see at once that Danny was straining himself to keep the tears back. "What's the matter, son? You can trust old Doc Scott, and surely you have no secrets from your parents. Where have you been? What have you been doing?"
 Danny pulled himself up and leaned against the bedstead. His natural color was slowly coming to his cheeks, but his eyes showed fright. He slowly parted his lips to speak. "I loved her so much."

 The doctor showed no sign of surprise; he remained silent. It was Danny who did all the talking now.
 "Mom and dad tried to keep it a secret from me. They wanted to take me to the city. They knew I loved her, just as I loved the country too." Danny's voice had a tone of grief. "Dad said I couldn't see her again. Jeanne has always been so good to me; I couldn't live without her. We always have picnics together, and she can swim as fast as I can. I loved to go bicycle riding with her too. Going to the city is bad enough but losing Jeanne is the worst."
 Doctor Scott began to see clearly the whole situation. This 15-year-old youth knew what he wanted. Jeanne had been his constant companion. Mr. and Mrs. Hale had very suddenly decided to move to the city in order to open up a small business. They knew, however, it was out of the question to have Jeanne with them. The small apartment which they had rented was no larger than a cubby hole.

She saw the long curtains fluttering in the open window.

Dr. R. SCOTT motioned for Mr. and Mrs. Hale to leave the room, and, after opening the window for some fresh air, he followed. Danny was falling asleep, but the old physician knew that it was a troubled sleep, a restless one, which might haunt the boy for many months.
 "Doctor Scott," Mrs. Hale began, "my husband and I were wrong. I see it all now." She spoke slowly. A faint smile came upon her lips. "Danny's instincts are healthy, sound. He loves the woods, the lakes, the open fields." There was a short pause and then she added mournfully, "And he really loves Jeanne. I did not think a 15-year-old boy could possibly have so much love for anyone."
 There was a sudden hush in the room and then a movement of feet. Mr. Hale, who had been silent all this time, now jumped up. "Doctor, in Danny's room, that noise."
 "Quick! I left the window open. He is climbing out," the doctor replied. Mrs. Hale was the first to open the door.

She saw the long curtains fluttering in the open window, which framed a full moon and myriad stars.
 One glance in the bed explained the noise and the black footprints which covered the neatly polished floor. Closely snuggled to Danny lay Jeanne, dripping wet and covered with mud. The dog had loved her young master enough to swim back across the lake and find the way home. Danny's eyes were filled with tears, big tears, full of love and joy.
