FRIENDS:
 "Did you think we had deserted you? Bet you wish we had! The heat and sundry other business got us down and we could not think of anything to say that would be of interest to you."
 "Did you know every job that goes out of our shop is guaranteed? We want to know about it before you tell your neighbours if you are not satisfied. Our men are all good mechanics, but they make mistakes. That's how you know they are working."
 "Bring your job in. Machine parts, machine building, and mechanical repairs to farm implements is our business. Be sure to get a quotation on what your job is worth to fix. Then everyone is happy."

3 MINUTE FICTION
SOUVENIRS
 By Jock Carroll

AS SOON as the president of United Motors had been safely chauffeured away to his office, his wife slipped upstairs to her room. This was a day that belonged to memories.

Margaret took a small wooden box from the bottom drawer. After she had opened it she sat quite still for a few minutes. For on the top of the pile was a snapshot of her and Bill at the beach. Emotion swept her. His blond head, quiet smile. The clear strength of him as he swung her to the top of the diving tower. Bill.

One who took life seriously. He dreamed of big things, and he was working to realize them. Night classes, so many hours of study per week. A daily grind that had lifted him from a mere machine operator to an assembly foreman.

A bright party hat. A dance program. Ticket stubs with silly words written on them.

Here was a newspaper clipping. A rakish young man. Crisp black curls rioting on his head. His devil-may-care smile was that of a man who is taking the world in his stride. In the picture the dark shadows under his eyes were scarcely noticeable.

"Hal Dennison," said the caption. "Popular young man who is succeeding his father as president of United Motors. He is expected to create more than a bit of a stir when he takes over."

"When I look into the mirror it seems that my eyes have never shone so brightly." She had written in her diary.

A little red book spread apart under Margaret's fingers.

Monday: "Today," it said, "the new boss arrived at the office. He's tall and good-looking and quite mad. Half-an-hour after he arrived he picked me out for his secretary and made Mr. Hurlbutton get another. He talks like a machine gun."

Tuesday: "It is wrong that I am writing this under Tuesday, because it is already three o'clock on Wednesday morning. But I am too excited to go to sleep. When I look into the mirror it seems that my eyes have never shone so brightly—and that I will never get my breath back from that drive home."

"Something kept bothering me though—bobbing around under the surface of my mind. It wasn't until now, Diary, that I realized what it was. I was supposed to go out with Bill tonight."

Wednesday: "Hal."

Thursday: "Hal."

Friday: "Tonight Hal asked me to marry him. And, oh, Diary, it's not just that I'm so hungry for the things that Hal wants to give me, but it's the idea of being safe."

Saturday: "Tonight, after Hal had roared away in the roadster, a figure rose from the shadows of the verandah. It was Bill."

"He was quiet and kind, as always, and he made me feel ashamed."

"I guess we both know what happened, Margaret. I thought that we had just about decided on a license and a small apartment next year, but looking at it from your point of view it mightn't be so good. Years of waiting. No money for luxuries. Just scraping and existing while I studied and prepared myself for something bigger. I'm not an engineer yet, you know, and it's a long way up from there."

"Then, Diary, some terribly sad music drifted out from the radio and Bill swallowed a couple of times before he could say: 'If ever you think that is what you want, Margaret, I'll be waiting.'"

Margaret closed the book. She cupped the small, golden pin in her hands, and her dark head bent over it. Two bright beads that might have been tears glistened in the sunlight from the window, they had shattered on her hands.

When the president came home that night, he heard his wife's heels clack upstairs. There was a quick patter on the staircase, then Margaret was in his arms and hugging him as though they had been years apart.

Her face tilted back for his kiss and he saw that her eyes were shining with happiness. Afterwards she buried her head in his shoulder.

"Bill," she mused, "what ever became of Hal Dennison when they made you president?"

We See This Week

THAT Violet Barnes has joined the staff at the Canadian Bank of Commerce.

THAT Mr. and Mrs. Dick Riddall, and family have moved into one of the new homes on Durham Street constructed by the Georgetown Lumber Company, and Mr. and Mrs. Harvey King have moved into the house vacated by them on Queen Street.

THAT No. 7 Highway between Georgetown and Silvercreek is being resurfaced.

THAT a number of Branch 120 members attended the Legion Imperial picnic at Guelph on Sunday, travelling there by chartered bus.

THAT Georgetown Dairy has a new horse and wagon after the recent accident involving the former equipment.

THAT work is underway on Project No. 2, under which 25 additional wartime houses will be built on the Reservoir Park property at the foot of George Street.

THAT there is no truth in the rumour which has been going around town that Smith & Stone Ltd. have purchased the golf course.

THAT local taxi firms are all offering special rates on trips to the Canadian National Exhibition.

THAT George W. Forsyth of the Norval Feed & Supply has rented an apartment in Mrs. J. McDougall's home, and with his mother will be occupying it soon.
