Improvements Can Add To Home Comforts
Certain building improvements can be made in your existing home to make it more comfortable, reduce fuel costs and extend the life of the heating equipment. Protect the outside doors with storm doors, because large amounts of cold air leak past a door, even if it fits fairly snugly against the frame. Such air leaks cause cold drafts.

Insulate your ceiling. At least two inches but better four inches of insulation should cover the ceiling exposed to a cold attic space. Material used for insulation should be such that it will not decompose, will be resistant to vermin and will be relatively fire resistant. Insulate the side walls. In existing houses, the only practical method is to have the insulation blown into the side walls with a machine. The material should be blown in with sufficient pressure so that it will not rattle later and form vacant pockets.

Caulk all leaky joints around window frames, door frames and even along the basement sill where the house foundation and wood structure meet. The caulking is applied on the outside of the window and door frames with a caulking gun that may be borrowed or purchased from a building supply dealer. Any heat that leaks from loose fitting basement windows and doors is just as expensive as heat that escapes from the upper living quarters. The heat from the furnace and the pipes in the basement serves to warm the floors of the room overhead and should be conserved.

List Advances Made By Agricultural Scientists
Here are a few typical examples of recent scientific advances made by the research scientists:
Chopped sugar cane was found to be a good roughage for fattening steers; experiments showed that steers receiving only a small grain ration graded lower than either full-fed animals, or those fed an intermediate ration; it was found that yellow corn cannot be counted on to furnish fattening cattle with enough vitamin A. Yellow corn is a source of this vitamin but well-cured high quality hay or silage should be used as a dependable source of additional amounts of vitamin A.

In the field of animal diseases, vaccination as a means of preventing swine erysipelas has shown satisfactory results. Then too, cattle that have recovered from the blood disease known as anaplasmosis may continue to carry the infection for several years, thus endangering healthy cattle about them.

WITH THE ANGLERS

With the 15th of Sept. less than two weeks away, the trout season is again drawing to a close. By all reports it has been very spotty as far as good catches are concerned. That not only applies to trout but other game fish as well. Many anglers that travelled to their favourite haunts found the fish hard to locate due to high water and an abundance of food. In other words the fish were not in their usual places but scattered and well fed. It all boils down to the fact that a lot of fun was had trying to catch them and that there will be bigger and better ones around next year.
