Bob Goldham with Pittsburgh Hornets on Recall Basis

Local National League hockey fans who believe Bob Goldham and the Maple Leafs are synonymous were disappointed to learn last week that Georgetown's major league star had been sent to Pittsburgh for a spell to play himself into condition. His friends have been rooting for Bob, whose badly fractured arm kept him out of play for a good part of last season, and they expect to see him back at his defence post with the Leafs before the season is very far underway.

The story was reported by Jim Vipoff in Friday's Globe and Mail as follows:

"Goldham is neither physically or mentally fit. We are sending him down to the American League with strict orders that he be given plenty of work to enable him to return to the Leafs as soon as possible," managing director Conn Smythe explained in making the announcement. "He is subject to immediate recall."

The tough rearguard of past campaigns has experienced great difficulty in hitting his stride this fall. He was out most of last season with a fractured arm and appears to have lost his confidence.

A conscientious performer, he has worried about his lack of condition to such an extent that he has lost weight and appetite as a result his effectiveness to the Leafs has suffered. Once he regains the form that made him such a favourite at the Gardens he will be back with the Leafs, Smythe said.
