SHORT STORY
The Dog and His Master
By FERN APPLE

THE dog stood motionless, still brown eyes riveted on the small figure lying face down. Spot moved the thin young shoulders and the boy's clenched fist pounded the hard earth.

Slowly, the dog moved toward the boy until he stood over him. Tentatively then, he nudged the youngster gently.

"That's funny," he murmured at that moment and then, suddenly, almost fearfully, he pulled his head to one side and stared at the dog standing over him. For a space the flood still as life and the look on the other's face. Then the dog lowered his head and with a flick of his tongue on the boy's tear-stained cheek, lay down on the ground beside him, his nose buried between his forepaws.

"Had raised himself on one leg and stretched out a grubby brown hand

"Aw, gee," he breathed softly. "See where'd you come from, boy?"

That's fingers gently fondled the silky ears. "You're just about the most handsomest dog I ever seen — Only a hint of the storm of tears lingered.

Then in a flood of remembrance, his eyes filled once more, and he rubbed his knuckles into them angrily. His voice roughed as he said, "Spot was'n't nearly as pretty as you, but I loved him anyway. Old man Benton needn't have shot him. Spot never hurt his old sheep — Spot never hurt nuthin' less it was rabbits or possums or varmints of some such kind."

A TWIG snapped in the underbrush. Thad jumped to his feet and the dog rose quickly, a low warning note deep in his throat.

The man's quick eye noted the tear-streaked face and then dropped to the clenched hands. "Hi, sonny," he said in a friendly voice. "Don't think I've seen you around here before, have I?"

"Guess not, Mister." Dad and me just moved here a couple of months ago. And Spot," he added forlornly, "Spot? He your dog?" The man's voice was pleasantly interested.

That's head came up and he made no effort to hide the heartache in his eyes as he said with a shaking, indrawn breath, "Uh-huh. He was my dog. Old man Benton shot him yesterday. Said Spot was runnin' his sheep." Chin not quite under control, he continued, "Spot never run nuthin' but varmints. I trained him myself an' I know." He stared defiantly at the man who gazed back at him with troubled eyes.

"That's too bad, son. I'm sorry you lost your dog. Mr. Benton was probably too hasty, but there've been a number of sheep killed around here lately and the farmers are pretty touchy."

"I know, but Spot didn't hurt no old sheep none. Not ever."

Slowly the dog moved toward the boy until he stood over him.

THE man was silent for a moment, watching the boy fondle the hound. I've never seen Bucky with such an idiotically happy look about him, he thought.

Suddenly, he made his decision and looking hard at the boy said, "Look here, son. You've lost your dog through a mistaken notion on the part of Mr. Benton. It looks like you and Bucky there under stand each other pretty well."

"You take Bucky to your own dog. I buy you a dog, and all dogs need a boy, then mister. You and Bucky become together."

He stopped smiling at the boy in that Thad's gray eyes and before he could repeat of his offer, jumped on his feet and started rattling across the field.

Thad looked after him wordless. He sprung to his feet and raised after the man Bucky lying at the heels.

"Hey, mister!" That's voice reached the man as he walked with downbeat head. He stopped and turned slowly.

"Hey, what's your name, mister? I never seen you before neither."

There was a note of apology in the man's voice. "My name's Lawrence Benton." Not waiting for a reply he turned and strode on.
