Brampton Cartoonist is Lions Guest

Bill Smith of Brampton, a student at the Ontario College of Art, was a guest at the Lions Club meeting in the McGibbon House last night. Introduced by Marshall Timbers, he gave a short talk on Art and later drew cartoons of several members which were auctioned off and proceeds given to the Sunshing Fund.
 Mr. Smith said that art is not a gift. Anyone can be taught to draw but the test of a real artist is in the development of a creative mind. This exists, he said, not only in drawing and painting but in every trade and profession.
 John Gunning reported that the club had made about $500 at the Halloween dance. Programs for future meetings were outlined by the chairman, Jack Armstrong.

WILSON HEATON DIES IN GLEN WILLIAMS

A resident of Glen Williams since 1914, Wilson Heaton passed away at his home there on Saturday, October 30th. He was a native of Halifax, Yorkshire, England, a son of the late Robert Heaton and Harriet Alderson, and came to this country in 1912, living in Toronto for two years before moving to the Glen. He served overseas with the Black Watch in World War I. He had been associated all his life with the district stone quarries.
 Mr. Heaton was a member of Branch 120, Canadian Legion, and of the Oddfellows Lodge. He is survived by his wife, Mary Naylor and one son, Bob. A sister, Mrs. Ruth Sutcliffe, lives in Halifax, England.
 Archdeacon W. G. O. Thompson conducted the funeral service from the home on Monday. Pallbearers were William Fellowes, Harry Savings, Howard Garvin, William Mitchell, Wilfred Gill and Albert Carter. Interment was in Greenwood Cemetery, Georgetown.

Miss Betty Grant had as her week-end guest Miss Phyllis Herman of Clinton, a fellow member of the Arthur High School staff. Miss Herman is Latin teacher at the school.

SHORT STORY

Thief In the Night
 By N. G. ADLINGTON

THE old caretaker was not surprised when confronted by the man with the gun. He had been expecting something of the sort ever since the publicity in the paper.
 He was swiftly but thoroughly searched.
 "Where is it?" demanded the gunman.
 "In the table drawer," said the old caretaker. "I never chry it with me. I'm afraid of it."
 The old man dared to relax. "Thank you," he said, "I was getting kind of tired holding 'em up. Do you mind if I sit down?"
 "Yes," he said, with a sigh. "I told Mister John it was foolishness, putting all that stuff in the paper, no good would come of it."
 "How right you were," grinned the man with the gun. "According to this spread, he's closed the joint up while he and his wife spend the summer on the coast."
 Must be nice to have dough."
 The old man shrugged. "That's the story the paper got."
 "What do you mean," asked the gunman sharply. "Aren't you alone here?"
 "Sure I'm alone," said the caretaker hastily. "I meant there was more to 'em closing the house up than the paper was told. Mister John's wife didn't like it here."
 "Most dames could stand living in a shack like this."
 "They've only been married three months. She liked it here at first, then she said it got on her nerves. Claimed the place was spooky. It's a pretty old place, you know."
 "Enough of this spook talk," the gunman said roughly. "Here's what I'm interested in." He scored a few lines on the paper with his thumbnail, then tossed the paper to the old man.

3 Minute Fiction

They were half way through the passage, the caretaker leading, when the gunman stopped and gripped him by the arm.
 "What was that?"
 "I didn't hear anything."
 They crossed a couple of rooms that must have been enormous, judging by the time it took to traverse them, before the caretaker halted again, this time of his own accord.
 "This is the music room," he said. "The painting's on the far wall."
 The man with the gun gave a grunt of satisfaction. With the piano as a bearing, it was easy to locate the Van Gogh. He let the light play

SLOWLY the caretaker read aloud from the society page blurb. "Among the many treasures gathered under the roof of the historic old house is an early Van Gogh."
 "I was going to tie you up first," said the gunman, with another quick glance at the dark passage, "but on second thought I'll let you show me where it is. Let's go."

on it, making audible noises of satisfaction. "You can help me," he began, but the sentence was never finished.
 High and clear, came the tinkling notes of a piano. It was as though an invisible hand had brushed over the keys, or lightly ran up a scale. The sound was repeated, but this time the notes were slow and uncertain, as if the unseen player tried to pick out an almost forgotten tune. The circle of light on the painting wavered violently, then jerked wildly down to the piano. By its light the two men saw that the stool was unattended, but as each note sounded a key was depressed by invisible fingers. The old man was touching the gunman, and he felt him go rigid in terror. The next second the room was in darkness as the lamp fell or was hurled to the floor.
 The kitchen door had slammed behind the intruder before the caretaker recovered the lamp. Approaching the piano, he fumbled under the open top, and when he withdrew his arm the music ceased abruptly.

"You little rascal, you," chuckled the old man fondly to the lumpy bundle in his hand. "It's a good thing for Mister John he told me I could use his piano. But it's no place for a kitten to play in."
