The Adventures of Flitt the Butterfly

by Robin Wynn

FLITT AND MR. BEAVER

Last week, we told you about the efforts of Flitt to free Mr. Beaver, who had lodged in a big tree after he escaped from the cruel eagle. After the spider-cord failed to work, Flitt thought of a better plan.

"Will you go to the Green Goblin's cave, and ask him if he will come to help us?" Flitt asked Mr. Sunbeam. With a bright flash of light, Mr. Sunbeam was gone.

It seemed such a long time to the little people waiting before they heard the deep hum of the giant Dragon Fly that carried the Green Goblin on his few trips away from his cave.

The Green Goblin went at once to Flitt to discuss the trouble. Then he gazed up at the tree, and quietly asked the little Green Forest people to sit in a big circle underneath the tree.

"Don't be afraid, and don't make a sound," he said. "What I am going to do is very difficult magic and we must have perfect silence."

Wasn't it nice of the Green Goblin to let them stay and watch!

First Mr. Goblin picked a very small toad stool, next the juice from a ripe berry, then a bit of fluff from a dandelion.

"Now I have a bit of a problem, for I need some real tears."

Mr. Green Goblin looked so stern as he strode around the circle and when he stopped and looked at one of the little Beavers, that little fellow was so upset about Daddy Beaver and so frightened by this strange goblin, that he had never seen before, that he burst into tears.

Mr. Green Goblin quickly held a buttercup to catch the little tears as they rolled down his cheeks. He patted the little fellow on the head and said kindly, "Never mind, little Beaver, we'll soon have your Daddy down here safe and sound."

As they watched, Mr. Green Goblin carefully put all the things he had gathered into an empty clam shell that Mr. Turtle had brought for him. Then he added the real tears.

The little people held their breaths as the magic potion turned first white, then red, then all the colours of the rainbow seemed to be chasing each other all thro the mixture.

Stepping carefully, Mr. Green Goblin picked up his magic wand with the shiny star on top, and stood quietly waiting for the many colours to fade away.

In the meantime the cruel eagle had come back and was circling above the big tree, wishing he could get at Mr. Beaver again but not daring to come down.

The Colours of the magic potion in the clam shell gradually faded to a clear crystal liquid, like water.

Mr. Green Goblin reached over with his magic wand and gently touched the clam shell. There was a low sound, like the hum of a bee. Then a flash - then a crash! A circle of black smoke curled up around the tree. It went right up past the tree and circled around the tree. It went right up past the past the tree and circled around the eagle. It came closer and closer to him and suddenly the eagle found he couldn't fly outside of it. It became like a cage imprisoning him, and slowly floated down to the ground with the now terrified eagle.

The Green Forest folk on the ground watched, fascinated, while this was going on. They were so amazed at seeing Mr. Eagle brought down a captive that for a moment they forgot Mr. Beaver.

Suddenly there was a cry of delight from Mrs. Beaver as she gazed at the tree. They all looked up, rubbed their eyes, and then looked again. They just couldn't believe what they saw!

The giant tree was growing smaller and smaller. Not a sound could be heard as they watched the tree become shorter and shorter. Finally it was so small that Mr. Beaver was able to step from his branch to the ground.

How all the Green Forest folk crowded around him in their joy that he was safe again. But Mr. Beaver didn't forget that he owed his life to the Green Goblin and he at once looked around to thank him.

But the Green Goblin had disappeared. In the distance they could hear the hum of the Dragon Fly's wings as he carried the Goblin back to his home in the cave. He had been able to help someone in trouble - that was all that mattered and he hadn't waited to be thanked.

The wicked eagle hadn't disappeared. There he was in his prison cage and Flitt went over to him.

"Do you promise never to come near the Green Forest again to harm any of our little people?" he asked the Eagle.

"If you will let me free, I'll fly hundreds of miles away and never come back," said the frightened eagle.

As he spoke, the cage of black smoke began to curl into the air, carrying Mr. Eagle with it. The smoke disappeared in the distance and the last they saw of Mr. Eagle was him soaring out of sight over the mountain, never to be seen in the Green Forest again.

Today we Live in a Greater Canada

They Drained a Lake

to give Canada a Great New Industry

IT HAPPENED in Ontario's Rainy River District. Steep Rock Lake - fifteen miles long and ranging in depth from 40 to 265 feet - was emptied by batteries of giant pumps. Finlayson Lake was lowered by draining from the bottom. The course of the Seine River was completely changed. And one of the richest bodies of iron ore on the continent was uncovered. Providing millions of tons of ore a year - with enough uncovered for years to come. Steep Rock's development has been spectacular, but it is only ONE of many examples of Canada's tremendous modern advance. Today we truly live in a Greater Canada - one with productive capacity vastly increased and diversified, offering to young Canadians greater opportunities than ever before in every field of endeavour.

The iron and steel manufacturing industry presents another spectacular example of development: productive capacity and number of employees have been doubled since before the war, striking indication of Canada's new position as one of the world's great industrial nations.

SO MANY OPPORTUNITIES

"A sound idea and the determination to carry it through - those are sure passports to success in Canada today where there are so many interesting opportunities in so many different kinds of activity."

— says Mr. LESLIE BURCHARD, of Windsor, Ont.

Mr. Burchard - member of Canada's 1936 Olympic basketball team - after returning from college in the U.S. and being manager of a local insurance office, started his own Butcher Enterprises. Their development provides many examples of this young Canadian's energy and enterprise. They include: a unique and successful service in the wrapping of products for shipping; and the modernisation of the Windsor Arena to present outstanding sports and entertainment events with great success.
