

"I trust them more than I'd trust myself"

THE BANK'S the place for my money. I always put part of my pay into my bank account—otherwise it burns a hole in my pocket. I guess I trust the bank more than I trust myself! I figure that's one reason why my savings have been building up the way they have.

Another reason I'm sold on a bank account is that I always know just where I stand. All I have to do is take a look at my pass-book. They're a lot better bookkeepers than I am.

What's more, what's in my pass-book is my business, and I can count on the bank people to keep their mouths shut about it. And that suits me just fine!

Going to your bank is not like having to deal with a state bureau—but that's how it would be under state monopoly.

Significant Changes Noted

In Nation's Money Market

Recent trends in the loan and investment portfolios of member banks and the current weakness in the market for medium and long-term government securities reflect a number of significant changes in the forces which have influenced the money market during the past five years, according to officials of the Federal Reserve system.

These changes may be grouped into two categories: (1) basic economic forces—particularly the increased demand for credit and capital by business generally, and (2) a series of official policy measures designed to curb additional credit expansion under current inflationary conditions.

Perhaps the most significant development resulting from these factors is the change in the interest rate pattern. Although short-term rates have firmed noticeably, this development has occurred within the framework of a controlled market, and the federal reserve system still is committed to maintenance of an orderly security market. The extent to which official action by the treasury and the reserve system has been able to influence credit expansion is conditioned by requirements of managing the public debt as well as by the government's current fiscal position.

Jerusalem Is Hallowed

Center of Three Faiths

On the rugged mound known as the Rock within the eastern edge of the walls of Old City of Jerusalem the Ark of the Covenant once stood. From Abraham prepared to offer Isaac as a sacrifice and Solomon built his great temple. There stands the Wailing Wall where Jews pour out their prayers—a wall believed by many to be a remnant of Solomon's Temple.

From this same black rock, Muslims believe Allah lifted Mohammed on a visit to Islam's heavens, returning him the next day. And the Dome of the Rock is the graceful Mosque of Omar, one of the three most sacred spots in the Moslem world.

Thus, notes National Geographic society, a single small area in the Holy City of three great religions—Jewish, Christian and Moslem—points up the interest in hallowed ground that is both mutual and comparative.

Jerusalem lies half a mile above sea level in the mountainous heart of the land of Canaan, now known as Palestine—its Philistine name. The city, grown much larger outside its old walls, is midway between the Mediterranean and the Dead sea.

Rope Around the World

American rope makers reach to the far corners of the earth for the fibers they need to meet the universal demands of 141 million Americans for rope. Whether it is for the 5,300,000 farmers or 107,000 fishermen in this country, or for a mechanic or a housewife, there's a steady flow of cordage fibers to American factories to make up the estimated 300 million pounds of rope and twine that will be produced in this country this year. With a negligible supply of raw materials available in the United States, large and small cordage makers alike look to the Philippines and Africa, the East Indies, India and Middle America for their basic fibers. The Philippine islands, with their world famous manila hemp, are the largest single source of abaca fibers. Manila fiber, the correct name for which is abaca, is still the No. 1 hard fiber used in rope making.

Dangers in Scrap Metals

Recent investigation of ferrous scrap metals destined to and on hand at steel mills reveals that explosives-contaminated scrap is filtering into commercial scrap channels despite stringent measures being taken by the army to prevent this situation. Investigation indicates that the contaminated material possibly is being obtained by pilferage of scrap items from practice ranges on military installations throughout the United States. This situation also may be the result of discarded war trophies having entered commercial channels through sale as scrap metal. The danger involved in handling explosives-contaminated scrap by persons not acquainted with military munitions is great, army officials say. A harmless looking piece of metal can result in the loss of life or the permanent crippling of innocent people.

Blind Syrup Uses

For more than five years a bland, very sweet, amber-colored syrup made from apple juice, developed at the U. S. eastern regional research laboratory near Philadelphia, has been used as a humectant in cigarette tobacco, originally as a substitute for glycerine. It has a number of other potential commercial uses as an ingredient in both food and non-food products. Industrial tests have demonstrated the value of apple syrup in the manufacture of cork closures, pharmaceuticals, dentifrices and cosmetics. For use in the last three types of products, it has been found necessary to reduce the normal calcium content of the syrup to a minimum by use of ion exchangers, because calcium is incompatible with the oil and fat ingredients in such products.
