Potatoes Boiled in Skins Retain Original Vitamins

Potatoes in good whole skins can be eaten the modern way—chuck full of their original vitamins and minerals. Yet surveys, according to specialists at the University of Maryland, show that women cooking to peel and slice potatoes before cooking, throw away the water, and so discard good food value that can be retained by boiling potatoes whole in their skins.

A recent survey of rural women conducted by the U. S. department of agriculture, provides some clues about cooking habits.

A high per cent of the women themselves said they peel and cut up potatoes before cooking. Others peel the potatoes and leave them whole. But just a few said they boil potatoes in their jackets.

The bureau's research on cooking and analyzing foods shows that potatoes boiled whole in their skins retain practically all of their vitamin C and thiamine. It shows, on the other hand, that potatoes peeled before boiling lose 20 to 30 per cent of their vitamin C and lose some thiamine as well.

Boiling potatoes in their jackets when potato and jacket are sound is a good start toward serving them scalloped, mashed, creamed, or in other ways that are family favorites, say the bureau's food specialists. Peeling after cooking is a quick task. Mashed potatoes prepared from potatoes that had just been boiled in skins, the specialists found, retained most of their nutritive value.

If cooked potatoes are to be held in the refrigerator they will lose further vitamin C, but keeping their jackets on helps to retain this vitamin which is so sensitive to air, heat, and water.

Home Specialist Advises On Purchase of Blankets

Blankets are at the top of many shopping lists these days, and here are tips on how to select a good one.

Miss Marlon Kaesser, home furnishings specialist, University of Illinois college of agriculture, advises buyers to read the label first to find out about the wool content.

All-wool blankets made of virgin wool rate high for warmth, and they are usually the highest priced. A blanket made of a mixture of wool and cotton will retain warmth to a satisfactory degree if the nap is made up largely of wool.

The nap is what makes a blanket warm because it retards the escape of body heat. The nap should be a good depth, fine, even and springy, Miss Kaesser explains.

Pay special attention to the finish at top and bottom. A blanket that is well stitched at each end will usually give good service. Cotton sateen binding is a good-wearing finish.

Make sure that the blanket will be large enough for any bed on which it will be used. Have it long enough to allow for a good tuck-in at the foot of the bed. Otherwise the vigorous tugging may be hard on it.

Facts About Lighting

Point on the wall can influence the effectiveness of light. Gloss finishes will glare and flat finishes are more pleasing since they produce less glare. Color makes a difference too. Light colors reflect more light than dark ones do. The woods make a difference. Mahogany reflects only 12 per cent while maple reflects 43 per cent. For decorative effects good general lighting will make the room one while local lights create contrast and place emphasis on parts of the room. Soft subdued light creates a mood of hospitality and intimacy. Direct light with contrasts of light and dark creates a gay and vivacious mood. Cove lighting spells sophistication, richness and a modern feeling.

World's Biggest Dams

Superlatives are common as a bucket of concrete when reclamation engineers go to work. Arrow-rock dam, just east of Boise, was the highest dam in the world when completed in 1915. This barrier, 354 feet high and 1,150 feet at crest, impounds 286,500 acre feet. Another "biggest in the world" is Idaho's Anderson Ranch dam near Boise on the south fork of the Boise river. This giant, almost complete, is the highest earth-filled dam on earth. Anderson is 456 feet high and 1,350 feet long at crest. But more impressive is the fact that, because it is an earthen fill, the dam is 2,900 feet thick at its base—more than half a mile.

War Gas for Glaucoma

Glaucoma, an eye disease that often causes blindness, has been treated successfully with a German war gas which in larger doses drives its victims mad. "Discovery by German chemists of a series of synthetic compounds containing phosphorus and fluorine received little attention elsewhere until the beginning of World War II, when British researchers re-examined the scientific literature and found reports on the marked toxicity shown by certain of these chemicals known as esters of phosphorus acids. These compounds have since been identified as the notorious German "nerve war gases and gases that drive men mad."
