Spread of 'X' Disease Fought by Veterinarians

New and deadly outbreaks of "X disease" in valuable herds of cattle were reported as veterinary leaders launched a nation-wide effort to find the answer to this new animal killer.

This strange disorder appears to be spreading rapidly and has been identified as the cause of cattle losses in more than half the states, the American Veterinary Medical association says.

To illustrate the nature of the disease, the AVMA told of a recent instance where four cows in one herd died after manifesting a variety of symptoms which refused to yield to treatment. Digestive disturbance, skin lesions, high temperature and a sharp drop in milk production were noted. Laboratory tests indicated that none of the more familiar diseases was present.

The AVMA said veterinary leaders were co-operating with state and federal authorities in an intensive new investigation of the disease, launched under government auspices at a 16-state conference in Washington, D. C.

Characteristics of the malady, as observed in most outbreaks, include loss of weight and appetite, diminished milk production, abortion, fever, and a thickening and inflammation of the animal's skin. So far, no drug treatment has been successful, and there is still no definite information on the cause of this disease.

Some Points to Recall When Cooking Sausages

Slow and steady is the rule to remember when cooking bacon and sausage for best flavor, tenderness and least waste, home economists say. By keeping the heat low these meat products cook and harden thoroughly without becoming hardening or scorching.

Slow cooking has another advantage. It saves the fat in the meats from reaching the smoking point where it becomes less digestible and changes the flavor.

Turn slices when partly cooked for even cooking on both sides. Pour off the fat from the pan as the bacon cooks. When done lift the assortment paper to drain the fat.

Link sausage is usually cooked by pan-frying. Take care not to break the links when turning them with a fork. Cause this lets out the fat. To pan-fry links, place in a frying pan with a few table spoons of water, cover and steam five minutes. Then remove the cover and cook over low heat, turning frequently until the sausage is brown and the water in the pan has cooked away. To pan-fry cakes, place in a frying pan and cook over low heat until cooked through and brown on both sides.

Cooking sausage in the oven takes longer but is convenient and economical if the oven is being used for other foods.

Big Floods and Small

Floods on the main rivers usually occur during the winter and early spring, but floods on small streams are more likely during the summer, specialists of the U. S. department of agriculture point out. Newspapers headline the big floods which affect towns, cities, industrial areas and large farm areas in the bottomlands, but seldom mention the many floods along small streams, which may damage only parts of individual farms along the streams. Ninety years of records of flood peaks on the Ohio river at Cincinnati (a drainage area of 76,580 square miles) show that 85 floods occurred during the winter and spring months and only five in the remainder of the year. In contrast the 11 years of records of a small Ohio watershed of less than 10 square miles show only one each spring flood; the other 10 floods occurred during the summer, the growing season for crops.

How Lie Detector Works

Even though an experienced liar may suppress outward signs when he lies, there is usually some change in his blood pressure, respiration and the activity of the sweat pores. The "lie detector" is an instrument that measures these effects in a suspect. He is asked a series of questions, most of which are rather commonplace, but a few of special significance have been inserted. His reactions to these are particularly noted. Considerable practice and skill is required to interpret the readings. Various heart and other organic ailments, intoxication, influence of narcotics and abnormal mental conditions may also affect the readings.

Most Literate Indians

What is called the "only literary pension" in America was the $300 annually voted by the Cherokee Indians of North Carolina to Sequoyah, who invented the devised Cherokee syllabary of 85 characters. It was so simple that children learned to read and write in a few days, and enabled the Cherokees to become the most literate of all American Indians. At one time three-fourths of the eastern band could read and write, a degree of literacy far surpassing that of their white neighbors.
