Newspaperman Author,
Library Founder

Author and former newspaperman, Henry M. Wodson, 77 of 252 Sheldrake Blvd., died Saturday at Wellesley Hospital. Mr. Wodson suffered an accident seven weeks ago, when he fractured his hip.

For nearly 30 years a reporter on the Telegram, he covered courts and special features. He was noted for his news stories in rhyme. Mr. Wodson wrote several books, The Justice Shop and Private Warwick, based on court experiences, and a novel, The Lad Felix.

Born at Newcastle-on-Tyne, he received his education at St. John's College, Preston. He came to Canada in the early 1900's. After leaving the Telegram, he was with the Star for a short time. Latterly he had been co-operating with Stephen Sawdon on a biographical work, The Prime Ministers of Canada.

Mr. Wodson was the founder of a library in West Toronto, a predecessor to the public library. He was one of the first in Canada to organize a children's story hour in the public libraries. Before coming to Canada, he was actively interested in the theatre and was a member of a travelling theatrical company. His wife predeceased him many years ago. He leaves one daughter, Mrs. Frederick Trent, Toronto, and two brothers, Edward W. Wodson, music critic for the Telegram, and a former summer resident of Georgetown, and Harold Wodson, journalist in Johannesburg, South Africa.
