Growth in School Attendance

Statistics compiled by the public school board reveal how sharply the school population will be increasing in years to come, and why the new public school came none too soon. These same figures show the necessity of immediate planning for more high school accommodation.

For the next five years, pupils entering high school from the local schools will number from 45 to 55. Starting in 1957, the figure jumps to 60, then to 70, and in 1961, present indications are that at least one hundred Georgetown pupils will be first formers.

Coupled with this is the fact that rural school enrolment is growing too. Both Norval and Glen Williams are growing communities and in time will be sending more students on to high school. The statistics prove that no later than five years from now, Georgetown High School will have three first forms, which in succeeding years will mean two second forms and two third forms. The problem of accommodating nine classes in five classrooms will certainly be a 'poser' for the school board of that day unless action is soon taken on the building of a new school or an addition to the present one.

A Public Service

That the threat of inflation in Canada is still very real in the opinion of those who speak with authority in such matters.

The fact there are still strikes and threats of strikes despite falling retail prices, falling industrial production, and the highest industrial wages in our history, make it apparent that the economic authorities are correct in their appraisal.

It is helpful, therefore, that The Steel Company of Canada, Limited, should have chosen this time to publish in Ontario weekly newspapers a series of advertisements dealing with current economic problems. These advertisements have nothing to do with the steel industry as such. They are designed to give Canadians a better understanding of the economic forces which govern our way of life.

It is evidence of the constructive trend of business thinking that this largest of Canada's steel producers should have undertaken this form of public service at this critical time in our history.

Terra Cotta's Fame Grows!

Articles in the metropolitan papers are invaluable publicity, and there should be an influx of Toronto people to Terra Cotta, after a recent article by Margaret Aitken in her "Between You and Me" column in the Telegram.

As Miss Aitken's article is self-explanatory, we reprint it in its entirety below.

Almost a year has passed since I drove out to a little village to dine at Terra Cotta Inn and to interview the props. A lot has happened to the place in twelve months.

Mr. and Mrs. (Harry and Betty) Farrar came to this country from Britain as immigrants two years ago. They brought with them their two sons, a dog, their household effects and what the British treasury would allow them in the way of money. Their idea was to establish a real English Inn, somewhere in Ontario.

Mrs. Farrar is a graduate nurse, her husband a technician in aircraft production. He is with A. V. Roe. But their first jobs in Canada had nothing to do with past achievements. The entire family worked in a summer hotel — she as cook, Mr. Farrar as maintenance man, sons Harry and Edward as busboys. The idea was to learn about Canadians and their eating habits.

A year ago the Farrars found an old, tumbledown house in Terra Cotta. They bought it for a song and started their inn. When I went out there last July, it was unpainted, unlandscaped, no plumbing and a leaky roof. All that is changed.

Through the fall and winter months the Farrars remodelled like mad — painted the house white, cleared the land, put in plumbing, enlarged the kitchen and put a new roof on the house. Their dream of a real English Inn (with strawberry teas, steak-and-kidney pies, not to mention roast duckling) in the countryside of Ontario is slowly but surely materializing.

In interviewing these energetic young Britons last year, I predicted Terra Cotta Inn would soon be a pleasant addition to our Canadian way of life. After seeing what their prodigious energy has achieved within 12 months, I stop predicting.

Terra Cotta Inn IS a pleasant addition to our Canadian way of life.

Pot Pourri

Vacation time is here again, and this Wednesday we shall be sojourning at the beach while the rest of the staff sweats it out producing the Herald. . . Gretchen Bradley has joined the staff at Barber's Gift Shop for the summer months. . . We meant to comment before on a unique window display at MacCormack's Drugs which featured a remarkably lifelike cow, which chewed grass, turned its head and twitched its tail. The cow was advertising farm products and certainly did a good job of attracting people to the window. . . Another smart promotion was Brill's Budget Saver sale when small sample packets of lifesavers were handed out in the vicinity of the store by attractively uniformed girls. . . A bit of philosophy heard recently is worth repeating: If you have a good idea, time will prove it; if you have a bad idea, time will wipe it out. . . The boy scouts had some real experience with the elements when they attended camp last week. After several weeks without rain, there was a real downpour, complete with thunder and lightning on the first night of the camp, and more rain next day for good measure. . . Our weather has been a source of wonderment to new theatre manager Bill Leslie, who came here from Scotland via British Guiana. Bill says that in Georgetown's namesake in South America he never encountered the sticky weather which we had for several days recently. . . Appearance of the Royal City Four at the Lions garden party later this month will have some special local interest for Keith Dolson, lead in the quartette was a district school student not so many years ago. Those who have seen the quartette at their appearances at Huttonville and at other district garden parties say the men have a first rate act. They mix a good deal of comedy in with their harmonizing. . .

REMEMBRANCE
The bell in the steeple was pealing,
Telling the passing hour,
And faintly came a-stealing,
The vagrant scent of a flower.
Back in the past it brought us,
Where we could not tell,
Its lingering fragrance sought us,
Midst the measured tones of the bell.
Maybe in some mistland remaining,
Dulled by the years that have flown,
Conscience a scene was retaining,
Although we never had known,
Till the scent of a flower that morning,
Stirred something in memories' lane
A flower the brookside adorning,
A flower with a fragrance the same.

Former Georgetown Resident Dies In Toronto Hospital

Toronto insurance man, Harry Carter Lewis, succumbs to a heart attack on July 1st at his home, 450 St. Clair Avenue East.

Mr. Lewis was a resident of Georgetown a few years ago, living in the large house on King Street which he purchased from Victor Diggins. Although his work was in Toronto, he took an active interest in community affairs as a member of St. George's Church and as a supporter of Georgetown Recreation Commission.

A native of Mount Forest, he had been an underwriter with Toronto Osgoode Branch of the Canada Life Assurance Company for ten years. He was a chartered life underwriter, a member of the Millionaires Club and ten times a member of the Top Production Club. Since moving to Toronto, he had been active in community, youth and church affairs. He was a zone chairman of the Community Chest, member of the board of directors of the Toronto Track Club, flying officer in RCAF Cadet Training and secretary of the Sunday School at Christ Church.

Mr. Lewis, who was 43, leaves his wife, Pierette Cartonguay, a son Peter, one daughter Susan, and his father Fred A. Lewis.

Interment was in Mount Pleasant Cemetery following the funeral service Friday afternoon at the A. W. Miles funeral chapel.
