Tree Rings Narrate West Coast History

The fascinating history of the west coast region is locked up in the layer upon layer of growth rings in the ancient giants of the tree world. Tree rings tell of drought, fires, wet periods and other happenings. Woodsmen recently discovered close by the shores of the Hoquiam river where it enters Grays Harbor, the prow of a mighty 40-man Indian war canoe partially shaped in the trunk of a huge Western red cedar tree still standing and still growing. Work had started more than 500 years ago. Then mysteriously it stopped. The brave doing the job with fire and primitive tools was probably called from his labors to participate in tribal war games and never went back to his forest work bench. Maybe he was a casualty of the wars. Unquestionably the first woodworker on the Pacific Coast was a Quinault Indian. In a way, a great-great-great grandfather of the Indian whose hand was strangely stilled. Because Western red cedar is one of the most durable of all woods, almost impervious to wear, deterioration, decay and disease, much of the handicraft of the ancients who felled our western water edges is still found in remnants of their work. War canoes, lichen poles and other products of the cedar log and branch and of the Indian crafts, many of still exist. The tree rings are like the human finger prints. They can be studied. Each ring is a year's story, whether the tree had weathered well whether a forest fire had scorched the tree in 1770, even the story of a severe wind storm in 1780. It is told by looking at the rings.

Tomorrow's Eggs Will Be Improved

What is the secret of the "Egg of Tomorrow"? It is the product of a new method of breeding long-lived, high-producing hens. Dr. A. W. Brown, of the University of Illinois, has developed a new method of breeding hens that will produce eggs of higher quality. This will have a great effect on the quality of the food that we eat. The new "Egg of Tomorrow" is just getting underway, which will have to do with the standard methods of producing egg quality. It is hoped that this will lead, within the next few years, to greatly expanded production of eggs with better inherited quality to start with.

He Cut It Short

When he was on the lecture platform, Mr. Durant's speeches were rarely brief as to words, one exception and it was undoubtedly the proudest speech of his career, was at Kalamazoo, Michigan. Mr. Durant sat on the lecture platform and listened to his introduction as the speaker of the evening. At least he listened for a while. The introduction rambled on for more than an hour. When he finally was escorted to the rostrum the fuming Mr. Durant set his lips and bowed. Then he spoke "Ladies and gentlemen, I have received a sum of money for speaking to you. You have paid a sum of money to hear me speak to you. I am now too tired to listen. We shall consider this to have been my speech. Good evening."

Research Saves Cash

How research on everything from bolts to storm drains is helping cut highway costs and improving roads and bridges was told by four engineers from the University of Illinois and one from the Illinois state highway division. Among University of Illinois research projects reported were: Cheaper drainage inlets, saving hundreds of thousands of dollars. Better drain catch basins, the small savings on each multiplied by thousands of installations. A 250-manual, of inestimable aid in planning highway construction. Better and more economical design of bridges. Use of bolts instead of rivets, offering considerable savings on small and remote bridges and their maintenance.

Steel Mills Take Nickel

Nickel finds its way into a very great number of industrial applications. In the United States, Canada and Great Britain the steel mills take approximately a third of the total, including substantial amounts for stainless steels. Deliveries of high nickel content rolling mill products and nickel for electroplating together account for about 40 percent. Smaller percentages are used for gray iron, steel and non-ferrous castings, heat-treated electrical resistance alloys, nickel silver and cupronickel, magnets, batteries, chemical products, coinage, and other miscellaneous alloys.

Thailand Fights Malaria With U.N. Help. Three years ago 60 to 70 per cent of the population of Chienkang, in Northern Thailand, was affected by malaria. Since then, with the help of the U.N. World Health Organization (WHO), and the U.N. International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), Thailand has largely succeeded in eliminating malaria.
