A "Weekly" Newsmen Tells About Coronation

R. G. Simpson

Derby — Third Race
The Derby Race, made famous by Lord Derby, who usually has horses entered but who had none qualify this year, of course was main race of the day. In fact, after it was run most of the crowd began to disperse.

From our Gallery we could watch the Bookies at work taking bets from the public who pushed and scrambled to get the pound and five pound notes into their hands, screaming and calling their names and the horses they chose to win.

These chaps, who are licensed seem to have a canny way of keeping records. It was impossible to understand the method but we were told they never refused to pay a winner.

There are Tote machines — Pari-Mutual — but these do not have the popularity of "Bookies". They were everywhere spread among the crowds so that not many who desired need miss a chance.

No actual record is available of the amounts these brokers handle. If all did as well as those with whom we view the amounts must have been fabulous.

In the back fields the silver money changes hands more than anything else. The smallest amount of paper is a ten-shilling note, similar

Parking Problem Well Managed

The parking authorities aided by the police and Roads Patrol, have stickers which may be placed on windshields to have vehicles directed via various routes so as to terminate at certain points where parking is arranged.

There are several roads leading to the course. However, when one looks across the downs and sees all the vehicles which have gathered it would be anticipated that the home going would be slow. But this was not the case as police were stationed at intervals all the way to the city and where intersections were crossed they prevented delays.

There were additional police available at the course as it had been anticipated that if the Queen's horse had won, the enormous crowds might have endeavoured to push around the tracks when the horse and jockey were being brought back.

As it was all very orderly. The winning jockey, Gordon Richards who had only this week been made a "Sir" was greeted by The Queen and complimented, the crowd cheering lustily.

It was a grand day — a wonderful spectacle of scenery, grandeur and Royalty. We watched the face of the Queen as her horse was beaten. She sat with her mouth partly open, hoping to the last but beaten by four lengths.

Next week we start our tour of rural England.

The little car looks big here and is performing splendidly.

Million Jam The Commons

Epsom Commons — is just what the name implies, a public commons. According to those in authority no one can be prevented from going anywhere at any time free. This still applies to the portion within the oval of the tracks.

Those half a million people there were not charged any admission. They saw the race from the top of the small hill from the race track side or from whatever point they favoured.

Some came by bus and saw from the top of these. However, the grandstand, which is larger than the Woodbine tracks and has three decks, is owned by a corporation whom I was told have squatters' rights and do charge admission.

There is also a company which has parking privileges and handles that at various prices up to a pound per vehicle. There is also standing room charge for near the grandstand.

Track Covers Mile and a Half

The present track, which is a grass-covered course, extends not in a direct oval. It has one sharp right turn and several lefts, all of which tend to lose horses their place and allow others to get out in front. Races are run at various distances
