Can You "Bear" It

A deer hunting party from Glen Williams didn't make the headlines for their bag (one deer shot by Don Schenk) but they made news of a different kind when Telegram columnist Thomas Richard Henry used this story in his Monday column:

SAFETY FIRST
Six Glen Williams boys went on a hunting trip.
One of them had been trying to shoot a bear for about four years. When they arrived at their happy hunting ground the lad who wanted to meet a bear, decided to take a stroll through an orchard that showed bear signs.
He saw his bear and shot him. He had been told to always shoot a bear twice, so he shot him the second time.

Then his pals, who had heard the two shots, came running up. Just to make sure, they shot the bear the third time, and then walked up to look at him.
The bear had been dead for a week.
It was almost cut in half by a snare between two trees.

The hunting party was composed of Gene Logan, about whom the story was written, Don Hancock, Bob Heaton, Les Dickenson, Chuck Crawford and Don Schenk, who were joined by three Huntsville men, Don Hanes, John Turly and Austin Boucher.
