He was the only Halton man so honoured this year.

Malton Area Becoming Foremost Aviation Centre

Canada's fastest growing industrial area on the western fringe of Metropolitan Toronto, has taken another important step forward in aviation, Canada's fastest growing industry. This was revealed in the announcement from A. V. Roe Canada Limited at Malton that two new companies have been formed by A. V. Roe Canada and a third acquired, to make up a three-company operating group with A. V. Roe Canada as the parent company.

The three new companies in the group along with the parent company will operate as neighbours in the Etobicoke-Toronto townships area, still further consolidating the area's position as the centre of aviation research, development and production in the nation.
Making the announcement of the new major development Crawford Gordon, Jr., president and general manager of A. V. Roe Canada, said the group comprises the following:

1. Avro Aircraft Limited — which is formed out of the former Aircraft Division of A. V. Roe Canada at Malton, currently employing about 10,000.
2. Orenda Engines Limited — formed out of the Gas Turbine Division of A. V. Roe Canada at Malton and Nobel, currently employing about 6,000.
3. Canadian Steel Improvement Limited, of Etobicoke, producer of precision forgings in a wide range of materials, employing about 400, which is bought outright by A. V. Roe Canada Limited. An expansion program at the New Toronto plant is underway for this company which will include a light alloy foundry.

All three companies are wholly owned subsidiaries of A. V. Roe Canada Limited which, in turn, is a member of Britain's Hawker Siddeley Group, which comprises more than 40 per cent of the United Kingdom's aviation industry.
The two new companies — Avro Aircraft Limited and Orenda Engines Limited — were created by letters patent on July 29 under the Dominion Companies Act. Both are private companies having authorized capital of one million new shares.
Each company has purchased the related assets of the A. V. Roe Canada Limited business (and assumes the applicable liabilities) in exchange for fully paid and non-assessable shares in the capital stock of each company, plus certain other considerations. In the case of Avro Aircraft Limited it was 350,000 shares, in Orenda Engines Limited, 400,000 shares.
The purchase was effective August 1st, 1954 but the two companies will not start doing business publicly under their respective names until January 1st, 1955.

Canadian Steel Improvement Limited capital stock is purchased for cash from the Hawker Siddeley Group, who bought the plant from the Crown in April, 1954.
Operating heads of the three companies are: Avro Aircraft Limited—Fred T. Smye; Orenda Engines Limited, Walter R. McLachlan; Canadian Steel Improvement Limited, Cyril J. Luby.

Natural Step in Growth
Mr. Gordon, in announcing these details, stressed that from now on each unit of the new group will be completely independent of the others. He said the move was a natural step in the growth of A. V. Roe Canada Limited. It was, he said, a logical conclusion to a de-centralizing program which had been proceeding for some time now.

Noting that Canada has emerged in a very short time as one of world's four leading nations in air power, Mr. Gordon forecast an ever-enlarging future for Canada's aircraft industry and for A. V. Roe Canada Limited as its largest enterprise.
Tracing the steady and often spectacular growth of A. V. Roe Canada Limited from its beginnings in 1945 (when Hawker Siddeley Group through Sir Roy Dobson made its initial investment by purchasing the Crown-owned assets of Victory Aircraft) he said the parent group had since made a total permanent investment in Canada of more than $150 million.

Not one cent of profit has been taken out, he emphasized. All earnings, with cash recoveries from depreciation, had been re-invested from the start with the result that today the A. V. Roe Canada Limited group represents the largest single British industrial investment in Canada.
"In addition," he said, "we have assets of engineering, technical and those very substantial but intangible production personnel know-how, and experience—and the various advanced projects now underway."

Highlights of Growth
It was nine years ago today that A. V. Roe Canada began operating. Mr. Gordon noted. Then it had but 300 employees. Today the three companies in the new group employ a total of 16,000.

Total manufacturing and engineering area in 1945 was one million square feet, now the total for the three companies is approaching three million square feet. 2.5 million of this concentrated in the 550 acres at Malton. Growth of the company can be marked by several major investments:
Purchase of the Government-owned gas turbine plant, now Plant 2 of Orenda Engines Limited; Purchase, modernizing and equipping of a former army warehouse as a design office and experimental shop for Orenda Engines Ltd; Modernization and equipping of aircraft manufacturing facilities and purchase of research and development equipment; New manufacturing now being built; Purchase and modernization of a building owned by the Shearfen Pen Co.; Purchase of the 100,000 square foot hangars and warehouse built by the Crown; Acquisition of plant and equipment of Canadian Steel Improvement Limited.

Production Achievements
In reviewing the production achievements of A. V. Roe Canada Limited, Mr. Gordon recalled that the initial production contract for Mk. 3 C-100's had been completed ahead of schedule. A second contract for the Mk. 4; is well on its way to completion and preliminary Manufacturing has been started on a third contract.

He said Orenda Engines Limited too had a solid record of engineering and production achievement. Over 1500 Orendas have already been turned out in a plant that only officially opened a little over two years ago.
Mr. Gordon said that production costs and overhead were as low, if not lower, than for comparable Canadian and U.S. operations. He said increased production efficiency had made it possible to move out of a cost-plus type of contract and for some time now, A. V. Roe Canada Limited had been delivering aircraft and engines on the basis of negotiated price contract.

As for the future, Mr. Gordon said both Avro Aircraft Limited and Orenda Engines Limited, have new projects underway. He confirmed reports that Avro Canada had given a development contract for the C-105 which is one of the most advanced aircraft being designed today.
On the engine side, he said the company had already spent $4 million on a new jet engine project which will be unique in its utilization of titanium and which is expected to open up new fields of jet power.

Referring to Canadian Steel Improvement Limited, Mr. Gordon said the company was set up in late 1951 to supply blades and other forged components for jet engines. "It has supplied millions of blades for our Orenda engines and has been producing forgings for other buyers. Now it is increasing the range of forging equipment to undertake the largest forgings in the aircraft industry. It is also expanding into commercial forgings in other fields for which a sizeable plant expansion program is underway, including magnesium and aluminum foundries, thereby bringing closer its goal of a complete forging and casting service," he added.

Why The New Set-Up?
Mr. Gordon said the new three-company set up had developed out of the rate of growth and increasing complexity of the aircraft industry. It had been clearly demonstrated, for example, that airframes and engines, as different products, should be dealt with independently of each other.
The Board of Directors had therefore felt that sound growth could be best achieved by encouraging individual and collective effort and giving each operating unit a bill of rights to develop its own future, and ensure a continued advancement of each individual company.

From now on, therefore, each company would be free to develop its own products and customers regardless of the other's problems. At the same time each would enjoy the benefits of group association; notably financial and management strength of the group as a whole.
