Now that most of the leaves have fallen we cannot help feeling that another growing season is almost over with. Still there are various jobs which can be attended to during early November, and one which I think important is the transplanting of trees, shrubs and hardy perennials. These having lost all their leaves have completed their growing for the season and are in good shape for moving.

Every fall there is a period of four to six weeks from the time the leaves fall until the ground freezes, the soil being nice and warm conditions are usually ideal for transplanting.

However, there are two things I would like to mention. The first is do not move trees, etc. until the leaves are dead that are killed by hard frost. The other is do not plant at any time when temperature is below 32 degrees. Freezing of roots before they go into the ground can do considerable damage.

The first thing to do in planting is to dig a hole but make sure the hole is deep and wide enough to take the roots comfortably, not cramp or cut the roots to fit a small hole. The depth should be two or three inches deeper than before, it's not hard to see the marks on the stem where the soil came to. When the hole is dug, break up the soil in the bottom, while doing so work in some good rotted manure or peat moss and a little bone meal. Then set in the plant and work top soil in round the root, tramping the soil down firmly, so most of the air pockets are forced out. The importance of tramping is to bring the roots and the soil into close contact. Don't fill the hole right to the top leave a slight depression for water. Pour a pail of water into this hollow, let it soak away then level off with loose soil.

The lilacs, forsythia, magnolia, flowering almond, flowering currants, honeysuckles, barberries and dogwood are some that come to my mind that should be planted in the fall. The reason being it does not take many warm days before the buds break and the leaves are out on the bloom as with magnolia and forsythia which bloom first. You see if it's left until spring to plant it is sometimes hard to catch them before the bud appears and conditions are right. Of course I don't

Dog Control Is Highly Successful

Speaking to the North Halton Urban Board last week, H. Merry of the Oakville and District Humane Society, stated that he felt the experiment of controlling dogs in the three municipalities of Acton, Milton and Georgetown had proved highly successful. An average of 38 dogs per month had been picked up in each municipality, and stray dogs were now at a minimum in these towns.

Mr. Merry said a slight boost in charges for 1957 was necessary, and Georgetown's share will be $1200 for the year.

The Urban Board expressed satisfaction with work of the society and will recommend to their councils that the service be continued for another term.

Mr. Merry was accompanied to the meeting by Inspector McNabb.

say you cannot plant them but it is risky and even if they do grow there will be a considerable check.

In the spring there is so much to do ground to prepare, seeds to sow, lawns to tend, so why not lighten your task and plant in the fall.

WHAT COUNCIL DID

REEVE ALLEN PROPOSES ANOTHER ZONING MEETING

Another public meeting to discuss the proposed zoning by-law is possible, after Monday's council meeting when criticism of a previous public meeting was expressed by Reeve Stan Allen.

"I'd like to see a meeting where people could discuss it, rather than submitting their opinions in writing," said the reeve, who said the planning board chairman had made it clear that the board didn't want discussion.

Mayor Armstrong disagreed, saying the planning board had asked for written objections so they could have a clear record, and this did not preclude more discussion at the meeting which was held in Wrigglesworth school auditorium several weeks ago.

"I can't agree," replied the reeve. "The planning board should be in a good position to give the answers and they apparently weren't."

The mayor asked for a show of hands and found four councillors in favour of asking for another public meeting.

Earlier in the discussion, Cr. Irwin Noble expressed his opinion that the zoning by-law should be passed this year. Deputy-Reeve Doug Sargent said he felt so too, but would want it to be unanimous in council, which apparently it is not, at the moment.

The mayor reminded council that as yet the planning board has not officially presented the final draft to council, nor has it received approval from the Dept. of Planning at Queen's Park, so council has nothing yet on which to act.

Dr. Faludi would work for the town on a yearly contract of $1200 or would otherwise charge $100 a meeting plus travelling expenses. "I'd suggest that we keep him on a meeting basis this year," said Cr. McGilvray.

"I'm in favour, providing we don't have him attend any meetings," quipped the reeve.

Cost of levelling land for an open air skating rink in the Sunbeam district is estimated at $50, and the town planning committee was instructed to proceed with plans for this.

We Would Remember

Georgetown, Ontario November 11th, 1956

A mother never forgets, a father might, but a mother always remembers. As she stands in the chill blasts of a November day at the Remembrance service, she may weep inwardly, while never shedding a tear.

Her grief is too poignant for that. She is remembering her boy whom they are honouring.

The fanfare of the bands on parade, the flag-raising, the Last Post and Reveille, even the hymns and the preaching are but interludes to her. She recognizes their place in the program, but her heart has only one purpose.

Yes, she remembers the son of her bosom, his trivialities and his seriousness, his gay and sombre moments. She treasures the memory of his babyhood and his growth into sturdy manhood. Many things cross her mind in retrospect, but he is gone.

She stands as it were at the cemetery plot where her beloved lies and shall we say that she does not experience a sense of the nearness of her beloved to her? Yes, a sense of peace otherwise unknown may come upon her as she remembers. Mothers never forget.
