Perish the Thought

A Toronto newspaper reports a story in an English magazine, that the Duke of Windsor would be favoured by Canadians as their next governor general.

Perish the thought!

Supposedly a poll was taken across Canada and the duke was favoured above such other names as Lord Beaverbrook and Hon. George Drew.

Let's hope that the magazine was only interested in a story and that there is no basis of fact in its survey. For we cannot believe that any large majority of Canadians would want this jaded royal castoff as representative of our ties with the commonwealth.

There was a time when we admired the duke tremendously.

We respected his choice of abdication to marry the woman he loved. People all over the world shed a tear on that memorable day when he

Time has proved that the job is the important thing and not the man. The monarchy has suffered no blow in being renounced by its proper heir, and the late King George followed by his daughter, the present queen, have held the affection of their subjects and the world.

But what of the duke?

Willing to reject his job but not the trappings, he has kicked around in several capacities, including a stretch as governor-general of the Bahamas. He has been given a royal title and, from all reports, still expects the deference due royalty.

He has been followed by his duchess in writing memoirs published for a fat fee in American publications.

Such actions rule him out for all time as a proper representative in this or any other country of the British crown.

A Journalistic Low

While we're in a critical mood, we can't help taking a swipe at our favourite city evening paper for a story which hit a new low in bad taste.

A young Toronto lady recently held the headlines for several days as, after confessing to shooting her husband, changed her plea to not guilty and was subsequently acquitted.

The verdict was a fair one, and perhaps one could have some sympathy with a lady whose subsequent misfortunes included a child born out of wedlock.

But what a surprise to find the Tely blasting a human interest story across its front page a few days later. Complete with pictures, it apparently detailed the sordid depths to which a person can sink. Apparently, we say, because we refused to read it, and in fact destroyed that section of the paper so other members of the family would not be tempted either.

City dailies owe something to their readers more than anything, they should strive to eliminate the cheap dirt which the tabloids and pulp magazines purvey. A discriminating reader will not be hurt by such things, but it is hardly an example to place before young people in their formative years. We hope it won't happen again

Should Be No Complaints

Hints at the nomination meeting that Georgetown is due for an increase in water rates next year should not cause any alarm among taxpayers.

Water is one commodity which is so ridiculously cheap that we couldn't imagine anyone complaining if rates were doubled.

The average family pays only a dollar a month, or less than 4c a day for a liquid which is used for food, for sanitation, for greening our grass and operating our cars, and for countless other purposes.

A family of four pays as much as a dollar a day for milk. A mild non-teetotaler spends more for his beer in a year than he does for water. The soap flakes used in the family washing cost more than the liquid itself. A many will pay more for grass seed than he does for the water which keeps it alive.

No one wants to pay more taxes than necessary and if we can have our water for next to nothing, all the better. But it must pay its way, and it's better to have the town water department balance its budget and charge residents what it costs, rather than making up deficits from other sections of the municipal purse.

FORUMS DISCUSS SOIL BANK IDEA

Mrs. M. J. Brown
 "The Soil Bank Idea" was the topic discussed by Ontario farm forums, November 19th. The Soil Bank plan designed to reduce surpluses, increase farm incomes and conserve national soil, water, forest and wildlife resources is being tried in the United States. This is done by farmers setting aside a portion of their land and not growing any crop on it. He must not pasture this part of his farm or derive any returns from it. The U.S. government pays them so much per acre. The reason for studying this plan in farm forums was to determine if farm groups thought a similar plan might be an advantage to Canadian farmers by reducing surpluses and promoting soil conservation. There was a difference of opinion in the Halton groups. Some thought such a plan would benefit Canadian farmers by reducing the wheat surplus and keeping all the grain at a proper price level. Other groups felt any reduction of wheat

Credit Bureau is Discussed by Chamber

Discussion on forming a credit bureau for Georgetown businessmen brought out some interesting points but led to no particular action, when it was on the agenda at a Chamber of Commerce meeting last Tuesday in the municipal building.

Chairman Harold Bairstow warned the dangers of a "blacklist" whereby merchants would pool names that they considered bad accounts and circulate the information among themselves. He said such a listing could lead to abuse and is not perfect. The only successful credit bureau, he said, would be one which provided information on every district resident, compiled in the fashion that the Dun & Bradstreet firm does. An office and secretary would have to be maintained, and a majority of businessmen would have to be prepared to pay reasonable fees for this service.

Answering a Lions Club request, the C of C will donate a trophy which will be awarded as a prize for a float in the Santa Claus parade.

A Christmas lighting contest for residences was decided upon and those present viewed the film "Blueprint for a City" prepared by the Delrex Developments firm.

MYTHS ABOUT YOUR HEALTH!

Laboratory Explodes Pet Theories

At the physical fitness research laboratory, University of Illinois, men and women from all walks of life are measured by a battery of 128 tests for agility, endurance, strength, balance, flexibility and power. These tests proved that many pet theories about health, including many of your own... are only myths.

5. Your emotional fitness is separate from physical fitness.

It isn't. Your physical condition affects your emotions, too. If you exercise properly, your endocrine glands are affected by the stimulated blood circulation and the glands in turn affect your emotions.
