Dispensed by BILL SMILEY of the Warton Echo

Well, did the sudden coming of winter catch you with only one leg into your long underwear? It did me. And I haven't had a chance to get the other leg in since.

Anyone over the age of 30 who says he likes the winter should be put in a cattle car and sent to Siberia to cool his fevered, hysterical brow.

I was just on the point, the brink the very precipice of doing all my pre-winter preparing. Of course, it was as hard to get me over the precipice as it was one of those heroines in the old silent movies. I've been perched there for weeks, looking at the prospect before me with shrinking and disgust.

It was enough to discourage the most ardent home-lover, the most fanatic do-it-yourselfer. Fourteen storm windows to clean and put on. About a mile and a quarter of furnace pipes to take down, clean and replace. Eleven inches of a mixture of ashes, water, coal dust and wood bark to be shovelled off my cellar floor. Six and a half rods of weather stripping to nail around the nineteen orifices in Draughty Windows, the old homestead.

Well, anyway, when the first storm struck, and the first four inches of snow arrived, I had nothing done. Zero, nought, goose egg. Needless to say, life has been no bed of roses around our place ever since.

At first I just laughed it off. "Ha, ha, ha," I snorted. "This'll never last. Soon as this snow goes away, I'll sail into things, and we'll be shipshape in no time." Well, it's been snowing ever since, and we're shipshape, all right. You should hear the wind whistle through the rigging in the old schooner. It's wails are only drowned by those of my children as they rub their stiff little hands together and whimper: "Daddy, why don't you make it warm?" It's heart rending.

However, things are not as bad as they could be. By dint of one here and an evening's work, I got the cellar cleaned out. I took out eight of those large garbage cans, full of muck. I had no idea what to do with it, so I just dumped it in the snow outside the back door. We'll deal with that in the spring.

Cellar cleaned meant we could get the coal in. There's a spring under my front lawn, which keeps it soft. Every time the coal truck comes across the lawn, it leaves a couple of six-inch ruts, going and coming. These added a certain rugged beauty to the place, but play hob with the lawnmower.

This time, I was glad the ground was frozen hard and covered with four inches of snow. It meant no ruts. Just to make sure, we studied the land carefully, and the truck drove across it at the exact angle we wanted. No ruts. Just a couple of gullies in which you could easily lay some of that Trans-Canada pipeline.

Anyway, the coal's in, and the furnace is booming out its usual 900 BTU'S. All I have to do now is figure some way to get the pipes cleaned while the fire is on. Saturday afternoon, I took some time off and went at the storm windows. I thought I'd do the upstairs ones first. They're easy to put on. You do it from the inside, and just hook them.

Something horrible has happened since I took them off. Either they have become larger, or the window frames smaller. Anyway, they won't fit. If I get them in snug at the bottom, the top won't come in and vice versa. After six futile, maddening attempts, I had: exhausted myself and my store of profanity; torn the skin off every knuckle on both hands; got one window stuck so I couldn't get it on tight or get it off. It's hanging there in space, as it were, the others are back down in the kitchen, for further study.

I've given the whole thing a lot of thought, and there seems to be only one solution. I'm going to get a nice, comfortable room at the hotel for the winter, and send the family to stay with Granny. It's either that, or set fire to the old brute and all go to Florida on the proceeds.

STOVEPIPES OVERHEAT BUT FIRE AVERTED

Georgetown firemen did not even have to leave the truck Monday night when summoned to fire at the farm of Milton Bird, south of Stewarttown.

A neighbour halted the truck at the Bird laneway and waved the men back to town, explaining that the alarm was turned in when it was feared that stovepipes were becoming overheated and that everything was okay.

A number of cars attempting to thread the winding country roads behind the township truck on the way to the Bird farm ended up in the ditch.

ROYALLY BRED BULL HOLSTEINS TO ITALY

Three blue blooded Holstein bulls have been flown to Italy from Canada. They will be used in the largest artificial breeding unit in Italy, the Istituto Sperimentale Italiano, "Lazzaro Spallanzani," of Milan. This unit is named in honour of Lazzaro Spallanzani, who, in 1788 made the first recorded experiments in the artificial breeding of cattle.

J. M. Fraser, Streetsville, Dr. Hector I. Astengo, Brampton, and Romandale Farms, Gormley, each supplied one of the bulls. They were selected as a result of a recent visit to Canada by Professor

T. Bonadonna and a group of his associates from the Milan Unit.

Both the Fraser and Romandale bulls are sons of the noted sire Spring Farm Fond Hope, who has three times been named all Canadian bull. The Fraser bull is also a son of Spring Farm Juliette, probably the most famous show cow ever to tread the tanbark in Canada. She has been named All-Canadian bul. The Fraser bull is also a son of Spring Farm Juliette, probably the most famous show cow ever to tread the tanbark in Canada. She has been named All-Canadian seven times and has been three times Grand Champion at the Royal Winter Fair.
