BOY SCOUT PAPER DRIVE NEXT SATURDAY

Due to the heavy rain and slippery streets last Saturday morning, the Boy Scouts drive for old news papers and magazines had to be postponed one week.

While they regret the delay in picking up your papers, they do hope you will co-operate and put your papers out next Saturday, Feb. 16th.

Sugar and Spice
Dispensed by BILL SMILEY of the Wilton Echo

A lot of men, referring to the ancient custom of taking unto themselves a wife, are wont to wax hard-bolled and cynical. "If I had it to do over again, you'd never get me walking up that aisle. Nosir, not me, boy! Once bitten, twice shy." And so on. This sort of thing is usually spoken in their wives' hearing, to the accompaniment of vast winks and heavy nudges, by baldheaded old birds who have lost their teeth and couldn't get Grandma Moses to walk down the aisle with them.

Anyway, I don't feel that way at all. Every so often I wish I could get married again. Don't get me wrong now. I couldn't stand another ten years of learning that women are about 120 per cent smarter than men. Not with a new one, anyway.

But when the Old Trouble and Strife starts reading aloud the accounts of some big, posh wedding, I get this feeling that I'd like to have another whack at the whole business of getting spliced. Not that our wedding didn't have a certain simple dignity, with accent on the simple, but it all went so fast I didn't get a chance to enjoy it.

You know how you sit in church and wonder whether you can afford to put in an off furnace, while the minister waxes eloquent on the sins of man? Well, I wasn't thinking about an oil furnace, but I certainly wasn't paying much attention to the "love, honour and cherish" business during our nuptial ceremony.

"Holy old jumpin." I thought, "what am I doing here with a strange woman? This is insane. I don't want to get married. I'm only a boy." Fighting the impulse to flee, I sneaked a look at the bride. She wore that holy look of vast assurance and calm that descends on all brides the minute they have you securely ensconced in front of a preacher.

She evidently noticed my panic for she gave me a little belt with

FARM NEWS
Halton Debaters In Semi-Finals

Halton's Junior Farmer debating quartette move into the semi-finals of the Provincial Junior Farmer Debating Competition, as a result of their win over Waterloo on February 1st. The Halton affirmative team of Bertha Watson and Jack Black met the Waterloo negative team in Kitchener, where they won the decision on their presentation of the resolution, "Resolved that more credit rather than more agricultural education would more adequately establish young people in farming in Ontario."

At the same time Halton's negative team of Bill Marshall and Watson Ruddle, was meeting Waterloo's affirmative team, in the Milton High School. Here the decision went in the Waterloo team on a split decision of the judging panel.

However, Halton won on the round and will now meet the Lambton County Debaters in the semi-finals. According to present plans the two counties will battle for
