News Around the Arena

Commissioner Herb Arnold's reorganized league is really a going concern and both bottom teams have started to roll and have beaten the powerful Chicago and Toronto entries two weeks in a row. When play-off time rolls around it would be anybody's guess who will be the big winner.
 Have heard that three of our Junior "A" boys are going to play at Maple Leaf Gardens on Friday, February 22nd. It seems that Orinda and Avro of Malton are having a big game that night and to start things off right they are having a game between the sons of employees (in the 8-9 year group). Local boys playing for the Orinda are Perry and Bonnie, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Lane and Alastair, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Blair. Good luck boys, and have a good time.
 Georgetown Jr. A All Stars played Milton Jr. A All Stars Monday just before the Barrie Flyers — Georgetown Raiders Benefit game and Georgetown defeated Milton 1-0. The goal scorer was Terry Lane.

Social and Personal

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Keatner, 43 Queen St., are in St. Petersburg, Florida for a winter vacation. They drove south accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. M. McCauley of Port Dover.
 Graydon Hillock, son of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Hillock, King Street, celebrated his fourth birthday on February 6th by having a birthday party at his home. His little guests were Joanie, Darlene and Robbie Bouskill, Michael Bludd, Randy Brandford, Robbie Fry and his brother Blayne.

Sugar and Spice

Dispersed by BILL SMILEY of the Warsaw Files

One of the numerous banes in the existence of a weekly newspaper editor in a small town is the writing of obituaries. It is, in fact, if you'll pardon the expression, a deadly trouble from the "deceased". He might have been the type who'd have raised supreme and merry havoc if you misspelled his name in the paper, while he was among the quick. But once he's planted, he seems to have lost interest in such trivialities.

It's the relatives. They come in several easily classified groups. There's the kind who write the obituary themselves and want it printed exactly as submitted, including all grammatical mistakes, errors in spelling and a half column of names of those who sent flowers.

In direct contrast are the relatives who don't know how old the deceased was, what his middle name was, how long he spent out West that time, or just when the funeral will be. They are also the type who tell you the names of five of the pallbearers but can never remember who the other one is.

Then there are the ones who think the obituary should be on the front page, containing the entire text of the preacher's burial service and the somewhat startling information that the deceased was a popular citizen, beloved by all in the community. This is hard to swallow when you, and they, know perfectly well that he was a crusty old curmudgeon, whose only claim to fame is that he still had the first nickel he ever made.

On top of all this, obituaries, as currently written, are incredibly dull. Clothing the exciting and colourful life of a man or woman in the drab and hackneyed phrases of obituary writing is a criminal as it would be to muffle Marilyn Monroe in a Mother Hubbard.

Can't you visualize Uncle George, who had a rich, full life, and died full, but not rich, sitting there on the coal scuttle in the next world, reading the assembly of dull dates, the dreary list of "survivors who mourned his passing," and the white lies of the preacher, that are contained in his last appearance in the newspapers? He'd be burned up, colloquially speaking. Yet this is the content of the average obit.

Does it tell of the time he fell in love with a girl in Rio de Janeiro, at the age of nineteen, and almost died of a broken heart, for about three weeks, when they were separated by the machinations of her parents, who practically had to use a crowbar to effect the separation. Not a word.

Is there even a passing reference to the fact that in his youth, he was the terror of the country dances for miles around, fighting every farmer lad who would do battle, and kissing every girl who wouldn't tattle? Not a syllable.

Does it mention the time he got drunk with the boys one night, absorbed a lot of bad advice from them, came home and told his wife there'd be no more nonsense about who was head of the house, and she, weighing 98 pounds soaking wet, practically took him apart? Not a whisper.

Nor does it say a word about the way he worked 16 hours a day to look after his own family and that of his neighbour, when the latter was taken away to the sanatorium for a year. Or the time he shot his young brother in the leg, out hunting, and carried him four miles home, through the snow, without ever stopping for a rest. You see what I mean? Look back through your own life. It couldn't possibly be as dull as your obituary will be, now could it?

Well, I'm not just criticizing for fun. I have something constructive in mind. Lawyers and trust companies are always trying to get people to make a will. It saves them a lot of trouble, even though they fatten on the resultant chaos if there is no will and the family start fighting over the loot.

I suggest, and quite seriously, that everyone write his own obituary. It's the only chance most of us will ever have to go out in a blaze of glory. For one day, the day the paper comes out, everybody would be taking about us.

And they wouldn't be muttering the usual platitudes like: "It's a mercy he's gone," and then turning on the TV. They'd be reading avidly the account of a rich, full life, smothering with disgust, shaking their heads with disbelief, chuckling: "Well, the old rip. I didn't know he had it in him."

My idea would be that these obituaries be started while the subject was fairly young, and kept up to date, with occasional revisions. When the writer passed on, the obituary would be ready to go.

after that, if you're doing anything worth reading about, you shouldn't be.

Accompanying these lively obituaries would be photographs, carefully selected from the years, showing the deceased as a beautiful child, supple youth and handsome young man, not as he is at 60 or 70, when that old fraud, Mother Nature, has given him too many stripes in the face with the back of her hand.

I feel that if this suggestion followed, the newspaper editors of the world would tip in and erect a statue of me. Just in case they don't however, I'm going to write an obituary for myself that will put me on just as high a pedestal as my status.

Let's see now. W. B. T. Smiley, known in later life as "Brilliant Bill", was born of poor but honest parents. From the moment he opened his eyes on the world, it was evident that here was a remarkable infant, destined to leave a mark on his age. As a child, he was exceptionally handsome, of excellent physique, and of truly unusual intelligence. See — what I mean? And that's only the first paragraph.

FARM NEWS

Norval, Acton Juniors Elect 1957 Officers

J. E. W.
 Last week saw Acton and Norval Junior Farmers staging their annual meetings. County president Jean Peterson was the guest speaker at the joint meeting of the Acton Juniors, which was held at the home of Jack Black at Moffat. Miss Peterson presented a most interesting illustrated address on her exchange visit of last summer to Prince Edward Island. John W. Pickett, past county president of the Halton Juniors, took charge of the election of officers which resulted as follows:
 Acton Junior Institute — President, Doris Thompson; secretary, Mildred Watson; Directors, Ida Matthews, Betty Anderson; district director, Ida Matthews.

Acton Junior Farmers — President, Wm. Price; vice president, Allen Bowen; secretary, treasurer, Sandy Buchanan; Directors, Jack Black, Calvin Sprawl, Fred Thompson and Charles Thompson.

On the same evening, Norval Juniors met at the home of Marilyn and Sandy Barnes. Here Mrs. Mabel Borgstrom presided over the election of officers for the Junior Institute; and Agricultural Representative J. E. Whitlock performed a similar service for the Junior Farmers. George E. Elliott, G.C. of Milton, was the guest speaker at the joint meeting. Mr. Elliott took as his subject, "Education and Citizenship" and as usual with this popular speaker, his address was thought-provoking and contained a message of interest to young and old alike. The newly elected officers are as follows:

Toronto Resident in Sunday Accident

A Toronto resident was rushed to the office of Dr. Alistair Macintosh for treatment of facial injuries following an automobile accident Sunday night, a half mile west of town.
 Mrs. Adelia Beckett of Toronto was driving south on No. 7 Highway accompanied by her daughter Holly Beckett when an oncoming northbound vehicle went into a skid on the snow-covered road. To avoid a collision with the other car Mrs. Beckett drove onto the shoulder where drifted snow pulled her car right off the road into a tree.
 The impact threw Miss Beckett against the windshield shattering the glass and resulting on laceration about the forehead requiring numerous stitches to close. The car, a 1957 Volkswagen with less than 1,000 miles on it received extensive frontal damage amounting to about $500. OPP officer George Moore investigated.

EXPANSION
 your most important decision in '57
 YOU are being asked to answer these questions:
 —Is expansion truly necessary for your district hospital?
 —Exactly what expansion has been proposed?
 —How much will it cost YOU?
 Some day your life may depend upon your decision about the expansion of Peel Memorial Hospital. In the meantime, the health of many hospital patients depends upon the will of the people in this district. Your taxes depend upon it, too. To hear just what's happening in your district . . . to hear the full truth about hospital expansion, be sure to attend
