Not Wanted Here

A couple of minor skirmishes on Main St. on two evenings last week have had the full attention of police officers and council's police committee, and police will be on the alert for any further trouble signs.

Georgetown has always been a law abiding town and its citizens young and old have conducted themselves as gentlemen should.

What Georgetown cannot be proud of at present is the number of "hot-rod" enthusiasts who menace traffic and keep people awake with their antics in the early morning hours.

We watched an exhibition Saturday noon. From a standing start in front of the old hydro building, a young chap squealed around the Church Street corner.

There are better ways to blow off steam than by such thoughtless acts. We hope if this young man reads this, that he will realize what might have happened if a child had crossed his path.

Protests Will Come Later

Another public meeting to discuss the proposed zoning by-law will fall as flat as a similar meeting last fall, we predict.

Council could have saved themselves the trouble and gone ahead with whatever action they will take when the matter was discussed on Monday.

The meeting can do no harm, however, and will at least put council and planning board in the position of answering criticism later on by anyone who objects to a zoning restriction and didn't attend the meeting.

Public reaction to such important and complicated measures as zoning tend to come later, after the law comes into effect.

Meanwhile, if we are ever to have zoning, council must avoid further procrastination.

Pot Pourri

Orangeville is having an interesting time with proposed installation of parking meters. The move came when council voted 5-4 for the meters, the mayor being the deciding factor.

What a wonderful Easter week-end. The churches were full, the Easter parade had a balmy day to show off new outfits, and the gardeners had a fine opportunity to get preliminary work done on the land.

Change Post Office Location After Century

Norval marked an historic day on April 16th when the post office, which had been in one location since about 1840, moved to a new site.

The change was necessitated by alterations being made to the former Barnhill General Store by Wilfred Kirkwood who purchased it last fall and is moving his entire merchandising operation in the new location.

The post office is temporarily located in Fendley's Store. Members of the Barnhill family have been postmasters since 1895.

FARM NEWS

SPECIAL SHORT COURSE OFFERED, WEED CONTROL

A special weed control short course is scheduled for the Agricultural College on April 29 and 30. A copy of the programme has just come to hand, and we think it is sufficiently worthwhile to justify us in taking one day, even though we are busy. The use of chemicals in weed control, is comparatively new, and there are always new developments.
