Sugar and Spice

Dispensed by BILL SMILEY of the Whipton Biscuits

Like everyone else, I've been somewhat alarmed about the Sputniks, proposed trip to the moon and other science-fiction talk emanating from the Kremlin of late, and being commented upon with so much gusto by all the hindsight experts, who can explain now, already, why the Russians are so far ahead and we're so far behind.

But I didn't plan to do anything about it, until I read that "exclusive interview" with Nikita Krushchev in a daily paper recently. A reporter had written the Russian top dog a letter containing a lot of long winded questions. Nik is no dumbbell. He answered them, in his own brand of double-talk. Result was a noisy back-pasting job by the newspaper, on itself, and a couple of columns of free propaganda for the Kremlin.

This annoyed me hugely, so I decided to get the REAL inside story from Russia. And I knew just where to get it. I dropped a line to an old prison-camp friend of mine, a Czech called Joe, ex-pilot. Back in '44, he didn't think much of the British, detested the Yanks and French, and bitterly hated the Germans. He thought Russia and communism were the answer to man's inhumanity to man, and went off with Russian troops when they liberated our camp.

I didn't see him again, until I ran across him a month ago, in a Toronto bistro of the lower sort. He was not the old Joe, who could distill a batch of illegal hooch from a few spuds, argue all night about the rights of man, or sing a wild, Czech song until the tears ran down his cheeks. But he was still Joe, and nobody's man but his own. I learned that he was about three weeks newly out of Russia, but not a word would he say of how or why.

So when I got furious the other day about the big deal "interview" with Krushchev, I wrote a list of questions to the address Joe had given me in Toronto, to find out what really makes Russia tick. Here they are, with his answers, in his own quaint brand of English.

Question: Joe, what is it really like in Russia? Answer: So you're a chicken? You been inside a egg? That's what is like, and some day you are fried egg sandwich, no ketchup.

Question: What do the Russian people, not the leaders, but the people, think of the atom bomb and other nuclear weapons? Answer: Hah! Russian people don't know atom bomb from Adam's apple. They erazy them Russians. Nice people. But dumb. Crazy.

Question: As a recent resident in Russia, what do you think the Western world should do to counteract the effect of the satellite Sputnik. Answer: So you jump off a roof, I gotta borrow money, buy a house so I can jump off a roof too?

Question: Joe, do you think it's possible for the West and Russia to live in peaceful co-existence. We are all brothers under the skin, you know. Answer: Co-existence, Schmo-co-existence! OK, my brother borrows my money, don't say thanks. Steals my girl, don't say sorry. I knock down a bully, he kicks him. Calls me a dirty name under my skin he is, but not my brother. Maybe he is your brother. By me, he is a lousy bum.

Question: Is it true there are millions of people in slave labour camps in Russia? Answer: I don't know millions. You remember dumb Vlodas, fat Chernika, little Mladov, in our prison camp? They come Russia with me. They ain't driving Cadillac around Red Square, Moscow. They cutting brass near Tomsk.

Question: Some experts say there is a strong possibility the Russian people will revolt and destroy the communist regime, as they did the Czarist. What is your opinion? Answer: Oh sure. Good change. It happen same day all fish in Canada jump up, pull all fishermen out of boat, drown them.

Question: Joe, are the Russian leaders concerned about rising the standard of living of the workers, giving them more food, better living? Answer: Oh, sure! You ask biggest pig at trough step back, he let little fellows have some. What he do? He bite you on leg.

Question: Do you think we should try to reach the moon, and possibly other planets, before the Russians? Answer: Moon? For what? That makes the potatoes grow? Let all Russians go to moon. Sooner better.

And I think maybe Joe's got something there.
