The day the TV picture
shrank

"Might be a condemnation," said Mom.
"You mean condenser," Pop started. "Might be at that—or a tube."
"Brother Will thought it could be atomic radiation. But only Gramp had the right answer. "Not enough current," he said.
"You know," Gramp went on, "I can remember when one light bulb in every room was really living high. Then more lamps came in—washing machines, electric stoves and a whole pack of others. Now we've made another big jump—with refrigerators—electric toasters—automatic toasters—T.V.—and to keep them all going strong we need even more current!"
"I'll fix that," said Pop. "Put in some bigger fuses right away." "Want to burn the house down?" Gramp yelled. "Bigger fuses are no dang good. It's the wires that are overloaded! What we need is Adequate Wiring. Call in an electrical contractor. Get more outlets in this house—more wiring circuits—a bigger fuse box. That's Adequate Wiring—and that's the answer!"
"But we can't afford to do that," Mom said.
"You can afford a few bucks a month, can't you? Well," Gramp tweaked his moustache and puffed up his chest, "YOU CAN BUY ADEQUATE WIRING ON TIME PAYMENTS—THROUGH ANY ELECTRICAL CONTRACTOR!"
Mom and Pop reached for the phone book at the same time.
